Like a large number of my little nephews and nieces, she is still young. All of you have some ambitions, and perhaps often wonder what you will get to do by and bye. But there is plenty of time yet, and all of you may do something now—just your very best at school, at play, and at home; and when the time comes, if you have been diligent in these small things, God will find something for you to do.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

FIFTH WEEK OF GENERAL MEETINGS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

IN a small company of workers the other day, an evangelist inquired whether the preliminary fortnight of services for prayer and consecration had fulfilled the desired object. "Not exactly," replied one of the leading officials of the Campaign Committee, "it would seem as if we should have given one-half of the six months to getting the Christians into the proper attitude for work. Then perhaps we might have found them willing to give up all other engagements for this work, and to perform any service desired of them." Not wishing to leave a false impression, he hastened to explain that, although all have not yet taken this attitude, very many indeed have done so—adding an expression of his conviction that "the Campaign is taking a deep and firm grip of the members of our Churches," and that "the power of the effort is growing from week to week."

Last week the Special Weeks of Prayer for Young Men and Women were combined for the first time, and every effort was used to enlist the interest in these particular classes, as an auxiliary to the Campaign. In the case of the Y.W.C.A., the customary evening gatherings for prayer were given up entirely, and the members recommended to attend the Campaign Services instead. On the Sabbath evening (November 12), Mr. William M. Oatts, general secretary, conducted the Y.M.C.A. evangelistic meeting in the Christian Institute. More than one regular attender assured us that the after-meeting that evening for prayer was much larger than any that had been held for years past.

THE AFTERNOON SERVICES.

One or two newspapers have been calling attention to the remarkable hold which the afternoon meetings, conducted by Rev. John McNeill, are taking of the business community. A reporter said on the occasion of his visit that, at one o'clock, there were not a score of people in the church, while at 1.15 p.m. there were certainly not fewer than seven hundred. The demeanour is as much remarked on as the attendance, while the conversations overheard as the audiences disperse show that the preacher has won the confidence and sympathy of our city men. Originally planned for a single week, these services have been continued from week to week "by special request," and the first month of them is now nearly complete, with certainly no sign of any failure in the interest. Specially popular was Mr. McNeill's exposition of the 23rd Psalm, to the beginning of which we referred last week. In the course of this he aroused some of his hearers by assuring them that he did not believe it impossible for business men to conduct their businesses successfully and at the same time obey the Lord's commands. It was quite possible, he said, and there were cases before them in which that possibility had been demonstrated.

On Tuesday the chair was taken by the newly-elected Lord Provost of Glasgow, Mr. Samuel Chisholm, this being the first public gathering over which he presided since his appointment. Wednesday's audience was estimated to number at least 1,200.

MR. M'NEILL IN GOVAN.

It was a foregone conclusion, when Rev. John McNeill was announced to hold a mission in Free St. Mary's Church, Govan, that the meetings would be attended by great crowds of people. The minister of the congregation (Rev. Robert Howie) caught the true evangelical fire in the North of Ireland in the Revival of 1859. He has been in the front of every great evangelistic movement in Scotland since, and his congregation is one of the most active in home mission work within the Free Church of Scotland. On the opening Sabbath evening the church was crowded in every part with an audience of over 2,000 people, while hundreds were unable to gain admission. One of the outstanding features of this mission is the large proportion of men in middle life to be found in the pews.

Nowhere else since the campaign began, have we heard the same hearty responses from the audience. The leaders are being well supported by the large body of open-air workers for whom the district is noted. Indeed, the danger in such a case is rather in the attendance of too many than too few Christians; and where the same state of affairs exists in any of the outlying districts, away from the great central halls of the city, it will soon be necessary to ask numbers of the Christians to remain away, that room may be found for the outsiders. With such a combination of forces at work as we have in Govan, no ordinary church can long provide accommodation for those who are coming.

REV. JOHN YOUNG (GREENOCK).

Following the meetings of Rev. Thomas Wilson, in White Memorial Free Church, the Rev. John Young (Greenock) has been conducting a mission in Kingston Parish Church. Inclement weather interfered seriously with the attendances, but a deep sense of the presence of God pervaded the gatherings. On Tuesday evening, Mr. Young spoke from Heb. ii. 3—"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

REV. D. M. CAMERON.

The work in the Dennistoun district continues to flourish in the most unmistakable manner. The place of meeting has been changed to Wellpark Free Church (Rev. Hugh Mair). Last week the speaker was Rev. D. M. Cameron (London). From the beginning, the meetings were large. On Sabbath evening the church was filled, and nine persons confessed a new-found faith in the Saviour; and the blessing continued to come evening after evening. Good open-air meetings were held, and the Gospel story told to many passers by. The workers seemed to have caught Mr. Cameron's deep spirit of faith in God. Friends from other parts looked in, and had warm testimony to bear to the blessing which had followed the evangelist's labours in different parts of Scotland, not only in recent times, but in years long gone by.

The following was the distribution for the week of the other evangelists taking part in the Campaign:—Partick Methodist Church, Mr. James Marshall; Maryhill United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Richard Hill; Renfield Street United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Arthur Klein, B.A.; Tron Parish Church, Rev. William Donald; Great Hamilton Street Free Church, Rev. J. H. G. Robinson; Sighthill Free Church, Mr. Hugh Paton; Knox Free Church, Rev. John Mackintosh; Candlish Memorial Free Church, Pastor D. G. Forbes.

WORK AMONG PARTICK CHILDREN.

Mr. John W. Arthur (secretary of the Campaign Committee) and Mr. J. W. Van de Venter are conducting a Mission for Children in Partick Free Church, Anderson Street. Last Thursday evening we found Mr. Arthur in charge, and he assured us that a very satisfactory beginning had been made with the meetings, the attendances and interest growing as the days passed. While the children were assembling, Rev. David Young (minister of the church) showed great skill in teaching the children hymns, and in getting them under control.

Mr. Arthur has had long experience of teaching children, in connection with the School-boys' Meeting in Hillhead, and is well-known throughout Scotland as a specialist in blackboard work. He had enlisted for special services in connection with this Mission a few of his youthful helpers in Hillhead, and three of them each said a few words to the children at the opening of the service.

Mr. William Mosson had an interesting allegory of a great king who built a wonderful city, to which he invited all the world to come, but left only a tiny little door for the people to enter. After narrating the different experiences of several typical travellers, he pointed the final lesson from his own experience, when, as a boy of ten, he was enabled to see the King by the eye of faith.

Mr. Arthur Steel told about the death of a brother of his own who had died when he himself was eight years of age, and who had specially sought the conversion of all the family, explaining that the change "just meant to love Jesus." Then he said that a year later he had been led into this love, and now wished simply to pass on the word.

Mr. Allan Arthur told an interesting story of the American War and the use of pass-words, showing that the pass-word into heaven is "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

Mr. Arthur's lesson turned on the use of the word "Come" as an invitation, and he drew out from the children evidence that they understood what such a thing meant in daily life. He does not do his work on the board in the presence of his audience, but has it all prepared beforehand; and, by the use of separate detachable pieces of black cloth, is able to make it appear gradually. The story of the Prodigal Son was told in simple words, and suitable spiritual lessons drawn. Here, as elsewhere, we found, by personal experience, that very many of the children are just taking the Lord simply at his word. Only the Day can declare the results of such a gathering as we were privileged to take part in that evening.

The other speakers to children during the week were Messrs. Alexander Mackeith, John Stewart, Thomas M. Pratt, William Thomson, jun., and Rev. William Baird.

A favourable change in the weather led, during the past week, to more regular open-air services.

Mr. William M. Oatts,

GLASGOW.

THE writer first remembers Mr. Oatts, then active in a wholesale stationery business, as a leader in the band of young men who, after the revival of 1874, threw all their energies into the winning of their fellows in town and country. His deepest thanksgivings to God are—(1) that he was born into a Christian home, and early instructed in Bible truth; (2) that as a lad of seventeen he was enabled to decide for Christ; and (3) that ever since he has been engaged in active Christian service. Beginning to witness among his fellow-employés, he soon commanded their respect for his profession; and ultimately persuaded a number of them to come into town a quarter of an hour earlier in the morning, that the time might be spent in prayer. Years afterwards we were told by one of the partners that, though he himself knew nothing of Y.M.C.A. work, he could say that no one was glad when Mr. Oatts left to go into business on his own account.

His appointment in 1881 as the first general secretary of the Glasgow United Young Men's Christian Association was no experiment, but the putting forward of one who had already proved himself "as the one man for the post." Indeed, he had previously done much to bring about the union of the three associations then doing Christian work among young men. The results of the consolidation more than realized the expectations of its promoters. Union brought strength. Many difficulties disappeared; and, till now, the subsequent history of the Association has been one of uninterrupted progress. No fewer than 216 "branches" hold weekly meetings for prayer and Bible study in different parts of the city, while the membership is over 7,400.

A man's conception of his duty is limited by his power of vision, and Mr. Oatts always possessed "the seeing eye" for the great possibilities. His reputation as a secretary might have been deservedly high, although he had done but a fraction of what he has attempted and carried through. Nor can much of the best be chronicled or tabulated. His unpretentious private office was a very holy of holies, in which many a young man found something very different from what he came to seek. "He is a sympathetic man," wrote a friend, "and his office is a haven for the distressed. He holds a daily levée of the stranger, the unemployed, the destitute, and the troubled in soul."

They came to him for reasons small and great. Some were merely presenting introductions on their arrival in the city. Others sought letters to strange cities, to the colonies, or to other lands. Many were in trouble; in not a few cases the trouble was of a nature which we may not name. Comparatively few came seeking spiritual guidance. Yet, to all alike, a word was spoken on behalf of the Saviour; and in many a case the bow "drawn at a venture" carried the arrow of conviction of sin. But it was not judgment that was presented in the foreground; the love of the Saviour was unfolded in all its beauty. Having a clear grasp of the truth himself from the first, he joined with that a faculty for making it plain to others; and a natural brightness of disposition commended his teaching of the Gospel to all with whom he came into contact.

But he never forgot the more ordinary duties of the secretaryship. No pains were spared to find the lonely new-comer a suitable lodging-place. Not only was the honest worker out of employment helped into a situation, but the weaker brother, who forfeited his places again and again, was borne with, patiently advised, and helped into "one more chance," and yet another.

Much might be said of the public movements for the spiritual and moral welfare of the community which owe their origin to Mr. Oatts. Prominent to all who pass along Bothwell Street is the handsome Y.M.C.A. Club, the opening of which was the culmination of an idea suggested by a newspaper correspondence about seven years ago. Many and grievous had been the complaints about the unsatisfactory nature of the lodgings in which young men were often obliged to live. Appeals were addressed to the directors of the Y.M.C.A. to solve the difficulty by providing residential rooms in some central locality. This they felt to be a scheme which, if not outside the sphere of their duty, would, at least, involve means beyond those at their disposal. But the appeals had gone to Mr. Oatts' heart. He saw not only a way of adding to the comfort of many, but opportunities for the extension of the kingdom.

Difficulties abounded; but, by dint of perseverance, a limited liability company was formed, capital subscribed, and premises erected. That the scheme was feasible has just been demonstrated in another way, by the declaration of a dividend out of profits; which, considering the time which has elapsed, is considered satisfactory. More than this, the club is quite fulfilling the most sanguine expectations, both as to the useful purpose it was intended to serve, and as far as spiritual blessing is concerned. Morning and evening family worship is observed, and every kind of help and encouragement is held out to those willing to do well. For several months the young men combined to hold a regular prayer meeting for the Evangelistic Campaign now going on in Glasgow. They have weekly meetings for the preaching of the Gospel in the open air, and have taken entire responsibility for the Sabbath service in one of the model lodging houses of the city.

From a photograph by Messrs. T. and R. Annan and Sons, Glasgow.

The General Secretary's Bible Class, on Tuesday evenings, has, for fifteen years, been a fruitful part of the work of the Association, and during most of that time nearly two hundred helpers per annum have passed from it to other branches of service. A deep and practical interest in foreign missions was early communicated to the members. First, one evening in the month was given to the subject; then a special society was formed to hold weekly meetings. Members have gone out to every quarter of the globe; others, detained at home, have "held the ropes" by prayer and gift, and have thus participated in the labour and the reward.

For sixteen years Mr. Oatts has led the evangelistic meetings in the large hall of the Christian Institute, where the audiences have always been large, and many have been won for Christ. The open-air gatherings are among the best-known in the city, and large crowds, who could not have been induced to come within the walls of any building, have had the Good News sounded in their ears by men from among themselves. This has been another training ground for workers, and many are filling posts of usefulness who owe much of their aptitude in winning souls to guidance and experience received in this connection.

Mr. Oatts long ago worked out figures to show what great numbers of young men, exclusive of Roman Catholics, were outside the influence of religious organizations. The present estimate is sixty thousand. Three times over, canvasses of the entire city were made, with results that abundantly rewarded the labour put forth.

Much interest was aroused by a "public-house map" of the city and suburbs, which Mr. Oatts prepared some years ago, and which has been several times brought under the notice of the House of Commons. Later a plébiscite was taken on the drink question; 150,000 voting-papers were left at as many houses, and 102,000 were returned filled up. Not only have these efforts strengthened the hands of temperance workers, but it is believed that they have produced direct results in the refusal of licences.

In former years the annual meetings of the Association were small, the more interested members putting in an appearance. But Mr. Oatts felt that much good would result from the bringing of the work more directly before the public, and the great gatherings of recent years have been the means of lifting Y.M.C.A. work to a plane altogether higher than that which it previously occupied in the estimation of the Scottish Churches.

The Missionary Loan Exhibition of last spring has left abiding results up and down throughout the land; and, in addition to the idea originating with Mr. Oatts, the burden of the work fell on his shoulders. It was the greatest object-lesson on foreign mission work ever given to Scotland.

As a preacher and speaker, Mr. Oatts is widely known. For many years the majority of the pulpits in Glasgow have been open to him. For young men's gatherings, conferences, and Gospel services demands were made on his services far in excess of his power to meet. He is a ready speaker, always effective and sympathetic, never allowing any consideration to draw him away from the Great Theme. When we last heard him he was telling, in simple words, the story of his own conversion, to the young people of the church which numbers him among its honoured elders. He has helped the movements in Scotland of such evangelists as Mr. D. L. Moody, Dr. Pentecost, Major Whittle, and Rev. John McNeill; and, indeed, is well-known in evangelistic circles far beyond the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, of which he is a director.

Mr. Oatts owes to his wife all that any public man can do to a true helpmeet. But Mrs. Oatts has "purchased" for herself "a good degree," and earned a place beside her husband in the front rank of Christian workers. A daughter of the late Rev. Andrew A. Bonar, D.D., she was closely identified with evangelistic work, and more especially with efforts on behalf of girls and young women, long before 1883, when her marriage seemed most fitly to unite two whose lives were dedicated to the youth of the different sexes. Mrs. Oatts' connection with the Y.W.C.A. dates from its formation. At first a member of committee, she became secretary in 1878. Finding the membership at 200, she has seen it grow to its present figure of 3,200.

Few names are so well and honourably known in connection with the musical side of Christian work as Mrs. Oatts'. Ever ready to help a struggling cause by her wise counsel, she has also inspired many a drooping heart with new hope through the exercise of this talent, with which God has gifted her in no ordinary degree. Every power is laid on the altar, and her highest joy is that of guiding wanderers to the Redeemer. Her record, too, is a most successful one, and her name is affectionately spoken far and wide by those who have gone forth after benefiting by her loving commendation of the Saviour.

Now Mr. and Mrs. Oatts go out to a wider duty. The English National Y.M.C.A. Council have invited them to go round the world on a mission to the associations in the British colonies. Sailing on December 1, they hope to visit India, Ceylon, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, and Canada, strengthening weak organizations, forming new ones where none exist, and expecially promoting the appointment of travelling secretaries. For this none better qualified could have been found, and they carry with them the prayers and good wishes of very many.

At a meeting a few days ago, in connection with the Glasgow Association, Mr. Oatts was presented with an illuminated address. In the course of the meeting, Rev. John McNeill told the story of his own indebtedness to Mr. Oatts, and referred to what men in every part of the world had also said in praise of his friend. He shook hands with Mr. Oatts warmly, first by way of an affectionate personal farewell, and then on behalf of the many poor fellows whom he had been the instrument of rescuing from days of misery and shame. The meeting responded in the heartiest and most sympathetic manner to Mr. McNeill's sentiments, and showed conclusively the warm place Mr. Oatts retains in the hearts of his fellow-citizens, as well as of the members of the Association. Missionary Convention for India.

VERY cheering was the outcome of the North London Missionary Convention for India, held at Mildmay, from November 6 to 10. The varied needs of India, and accounts of missions in that land, were forcibly presented by several speakers. The average attendance was good, and the tone of the meetings was deeply spiritual, practical, and interesting. The singing was led by a choir of the Bethshan missionary students.

The societies taking part were the Christian Literature Society for India, the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, the Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission, and the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society. Each Mission had its own meeting and a representative in the General Assembly held on the closing evening. This meeting was largely attended, and proved a fitting close to the earnest gatherings which had preceded it.

The Bible readings, given daily, were most helpful and stimulating, especially that of Monday afternoon, dealing with the subject of the Second Advent, given by Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Continual emphasis was laid upon the importance of personal love and consecration to the Lord Jesus Christ, as a principal factor in the evangelization of the world; leading to more definite prayer and work for the salvation of the heathen. Royal Sailors' Rest.—The report of 1898-99 of Miss Weston's great work among the sailors is very bright and readable. Under the title of "A Short Account of Three Happy Homes," Miss Weston outlines the doings and developments of twelve months. The booklet is prettily illustrated. The list of subscriptions and donations is most encouraging. Copies may be had from Miss Weston at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.—Some interesting letters, writes the Hon. Gertrude M. Kinnaird, have recently been received from missionaries in the field. Miss MacPhun, at Bulandshuhr, desires to buy a tent, so as to be able to visit villages as yet untouched, and gather the women to hear the Gospel. Miss Anne Hill, who has gone to Khurjih, a large native town, where no Christian missionary has ever lived until last year, is endeavouring to complete the building fund of the house, which is being prepared for her. Miss Harris, who has resided for so long at Fyzabad and Ajondhya, is hoping to repair one of the schools. The address of the Mission is, 2, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, W.C.

Scottish Notes.

THE Glasgow and West of Scotland Auxiliary reports a contribution for this year of £825 to the McAll Mission in Paris. At the annual meeting last week, Rev. C. E. Greig, chairman and director of the Mission, was present, and gave an able and interesting address on the present position of Christian work in France.

Meetings have just been held in Glasgow and Edinburgh in connection with the Scottish Association for Irish Missions. It was mentioned that the colporteurs have been meeting with a good deal of encouragement in their work, and that they get many Roman Catholics induced to purchase Christian literature. The number of agents is now forty. During the year they reported 159,312 visits, and religious conversations on 69,413 occasions. The sales of Bibles, New Testaments, and Christian books numbered 106,674.

An interesting Conference was held last week in Edinburgh, in connection with the Monthly Visitor Tract Society. It was reported that the distributors connected with the Society in Edinburgh now number about 1,000, and that throughout the United Kingdom between 10,000 and 15,000 persons are similarly engaged. During each month 55,000 tracts are distributed in Edinburgh, and in all 400,000 over the country—making a total approaching 5,000,000 per annum. Since the institution of the Society nearly 420,000,000 tracts have been sent out.

At the meeting of Glasgow U.P. Presbytery last week, special attention was called to the action of certain limited liability companies engaged in the provision trade, which require managers of their shops to appear at mid-day on Sabbath to settle up the transactions of the week.

The moderators for the ensuing General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland and the Free Church have now been nominated. In the former case the choice has fallen on Rev. Norman Macleod, D.D., Inverness; and in the latter on Rev. Walter Ross Taylor, D.D., Glasgow. In each church the same position was at one time occupied by the father of the new moderator.

The Baptist Industrial Mission reports satisfactory progress in the cultivation of its estate of Gowd. The little church now numbers forty members, and every Lord's Day twenty-five evangelists are engaged in itinerant work, under the direction of the superintendent. As many as 4,000 persons have attended some of the meetings.

At a meeting recently of the Glasgow Branch of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, about 150 students, of both sexes, were present. Rev. George Wilson (St. Michael's, Edinburgh), who presided, in his address dwelt chiefly on the place and value of culture in the work of the mission field. He was glad the day was over for the weakling, who was no use at home, being sent to India. Culture was essential, but it must always be under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Rev. Dr. Robson followed with an address on "The Royal Banner of Christ." Principal Mackichan, of Bombay, an old Glasgow student, held that the missionary needs both intellectuality and spirituality in equally high measure.

Nehemiah xiii. 15-22.

Golden Text.—Ex. xx. 8.

Keeping the Sabbath.

Lesson Connection.

TWO Sundays ago we were learning about the great work Nehemiah accomplished in Jerusalem. He remained there for twelve years; then he was recalled to Persia. After about five years the King gave him permission to return to Jerusalem, and what he found there saddened his heart, and stirred him to make great reforms. The Jews had relapsed into gross evils; even the high priest had become connected to Tobiah, the Ammonite, and had given him a room in the Temple; the people had intermarried; God's worship, tithes, laws, were all set at naught. Nehemiah, in righteous indignation, cleansed the Temple, and compelled the people to cease from their heathen practices. This reminds us of what our Lord Jesus did (John ii. 13-17; Matt. xxi. 12, 13); also of the words of the Apostle Paul (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17).

It was Nehemiah's duty as Jewish Governor to insist upon the observance of all Jewish laws. We, as Christians, must not go to work exactly as he did; but we must set our faces just as determinedly against all sin, and try to put it down, because it dishonours our God and grieves our Saviour.

Nehemiah xiii. 15-22.

Verses 15, 16. Among other evils, Nehemiah discovered that Sabbath-breaking had become the custom. The Jews worked on their farms and wine-presses, carried their goods and fruits about, bought and sold, trafficked with foreigners, even with the wicked men from Tyre (Matt. xi. 21; Eze. xxvii. 3-8, 32, 33). Nehemiah testified against them. We should never be afraid to testify against wrong-doing (Jer. xvii. 21-28).

Verses 17, 18. He went to the rulers, who knew better, and contended, argued, and pointed out the evil that would follow. Perhaps these Jews had forgotten to keep the Sabbath while in Babylon, or been made to work seven days a week for their heathen masters. It was Sabbath-breaking which had caused their former downfall (Eze. xx. 13; Isa. lviii. 13). The beginning of the downfall of any nation is the non-observance of the day of rest. (Tell of Paris and Continental Sundays).

Verses 19-21. The Jewish Sabbath began at sunset on Friday. Nehemiah exercised his authority, and sent his own body-guard to keep the gates shut; and when he found that the merchants waited outside hoping to do business, he went out and ordered them off under penalty of taking them prisoners. If speaking and commanding do not remove sin, we must try active measures.

Verse 22. The Levites were to undertake the guarding of the gates as a religious duty, for it was to keep out all who would buy and sell on the Sabbath. Even before guarding the gates they were to purify themselves. Here is a lesson as to how God requires us to do the least service for Him. Nehemiah's prayer, "Remember me." He had had hard work and men had cursed him; but he craved God's blessing (Ps. cvi. 4; Jer. xv. 15; Luke xxiii. 42).

The Sabbath.

"Sabbath" means rest. From the beginning God set apart one day in seven as a day of rest for man (Gen. ii. 3). Jesus said the "Sabbath was made for man" (Mark ii. 27): man's body needs the day of rest as well as his soul needs a day for worship and the study of divine things. Some say the Sabbath was a Jewish institution, and not binding upon Christians; but God "set apart" the day for rest long before there were any Jews; and, when He gave the Ten Commandments, the law about Sabbath was put in, beginning with the word "Remember," because they knew it as God's law before. Recall about the Israelites and the manna (Ex. xvi. 25, 29). We cannot compel men to keep a religious Sabbath, but all ought to have the Day of Rest, for time to think about God. Jesus said we should "love our neighbour as ourselves." Therefore we should never do anything which will hinder or deprive another of his day of rest.

The Lord's Day.

Christians keep their "rest-day" on the first day of the week, because Jesus rose from the dead on that day. It should be a day of joy. It is the Lord's day, not ours. Jesus taught us how to keep it. (See Matt. xii. 7, 8; Mark i. 21-iii. 4; Luke iv. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; Rev. i. 10.)

Schools for Bible Study.

IT was with feelings of deep regret that the audience which assembled at the usual weekly gathering at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, November 15, heard of the indisposition and consequent absence of Rev. Hubert Brooke. At very short notice, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas kindly agreed to give an address; he spoke with great helpfulness on 1 John i. In order to preserve the continuity of Mr. Brooke's course of study, we append the chief points on which he was intending to dwell regarding the book of Exodus:—

Introduction. 1. The title is Greek, meaning "way out" (Ex. xix. 1; Ps. cxxi. 8); "departure" (Lu. ix. 31). Hebrew title: "These are the names," viz., of those who came down to the place whence they were redeemed. 2. Writer is Moses, describing his own story and experience. 3. The time covered by the book is 145 years (ch. i. and ii. take in 143; ch. iii.-xl. probably less than two years).

Divisions.—1. Either into two parts: (a) Historical, with introduction (i., ii.); preparation for deliverance (iii.-xii.); the deliverance completed (xiii.-xviii.); and (b) legislative (xix.-xl.). 2. Or into three parts: (a) In Egypt (i.-xii.); (b) Egypt to Sinai (xiii.-xviii.); (c) at Sinai (xix.xl.).

Main Topic.—Redemption. 1. The key-note to Exodus, expressed in two Hebrew words: (a) Ex. vi. 6, xv. 13; "to demand back one's property," to repurchase; used twenty-seven times in Lev. xxv., xxvii., of freeing property from a charge. (b) Ex. xiii. 13, 15; xxi. 8; xxxiv. 20: "to loose, separate, set free, deliver." 2. Implies a condition of bondage pre-existing; the phrase, "out of Egypt," forty-eight times in Ex., forty-five in rest of Pentateuch, seventy times in eighteen other Old Testament books. 3. Refers to a power by which, a price at which, a sacrifice through which, and a new service to which the redeemed are brought out (Ex. vi. 6, xii. 5; Is. xliii. 1; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19). 4. Is an act of deliverance from above (Ps. xlix. 7, 8, 15); results in liberty from bondage and power for service.

Personal Use.—1. The whole story is typical of: Passover (1 Cor. v. 7, 8); Exodus (1 Cor. x. 1-7), and Covenant (2 Cor. iii. 7). 2. It explains or illustrates election (Rom. ix. 15-18), calling (1 Pet. ii, 9), covenant (Heb. ix. 20), access (Heb. x, 20, 21). 3. Redemption is illustrated in its New Testament use of deliverance (Col. i, 13, &c.), ransom (1 Tim. ii. 6), and fulness of blessing (Lu. i. 68-79).

Rev. G. SOLTAU'S LECTURES.

Continuing his consideration of the portraitures of our Lord in the Gospels, Mr. Soltau recently dealt with the subject under the following heads:—St. Luke's Portrait.—"Behold the Man." The key verse of the Gospel is xv. 2, "This man receiveth sinners." Some features specially brought out are his tenderness, compassion, sympathy, and readiness to help. Observe, too, the praise notes in chaps. 1 and 11, and the recurrence of the phrase, "glorifying God." Following praise will be prayer, and Jesus as a man of prayer is seen in ten incidents, while his teaching on prayer is given in chaps. xi. and xviii. Occurrences recorded by Luke only are those referring to the shepherds at Bethlehem, the temple scene when the Lord was but twelve years of age, the invitation to Simon's house and the results, Mary and Martha at Bethany, the two brothers disputing over the inheritance, Zaccheus, our Lord weeping over Jerusalem, the prayer for his persecutors, the dying thief, the Emmaus incident, eating fish and honeycomb. Another feature of study is the ministry to and of women, illustrated by the mother, Elizabeth and Anna, surrounding his infancy, Peter's mother-in-law, the widow of Nain, the sinful woman, Mary Magdalene, Jairus' daughter, the woman healed by the touch, the woman in the synagogue, and others. The six miracles recorded by St. Luke are in harmony with the main thought of the Gospel: Draught of fishes, raising the widow of Nain's son, healing the cases of spinal trouble and of dropsy, the ten lepers (one a Samaritan, doubly an outcast), and the healing of Malchus.

Obituary.

MR. THOMAS WHITTAKER.

THE death of Mr. Thomas Whittaker, which occurred on Monday last, at Scarborough, closes a very interesting career. While employed as a cotton-dresser at Blackburn he signed the pledge, after listening to a lecture by the late Mr. Joseph Livesey. Subsequently he went forth to preach the benefits of temperance, continuing enthusiastically in the work for sixty-four years. He was in his eighty-seventh year.

MRS. ELIZA RUTHERFORD.

Early on Sunday morning, September 24, passed away at her residence, "Como," on the banks of Lake Connewarre, a few miles from Geelong, Victoria, Mrs. Eliza Rutherford, a woman full of good works and the Spirit of Christ. She was in her eighty-seventh year, and had spent more than sixty years in the service of the Master.

In early days Mrs. Rutherford was an earnest Sabbath school teacher, and leader of women's prayer meetings, and to the last no one could be in her presence without hearing of the Saviour she so loved and adored. She was ever ready to declare to those who did not know it the wondrous story of the Gospel of Peace. Pedlars and beggars found in her a constant friend, the sick and friendless were cared for, and her house was always open to Christian workers needing rest and change.

SIR WILLIAM DAWSON.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Sir William Dawson, which took place suddenly at Montreal on Sunday morning. In him is lost one of the most distinguished of Christian scientists. Born in 1820, and educated at Edinburgh University, he devoted much time to scientific pursuits in Canada under Sir Charles Lyell. He rapidly gained distinction and prominence; and after lecturing on Natural History at Dalhousie College, Halifax, N.S., he was appointed Superintendent of Education for the Dominion. This was the opening of a brilliant career. He soon became Principal of McGill University, from which he retired in 1893. Sir William was a prolific writer, and his books on scientific subjects display a firm Christian foundation. A Scotch Presbyterian, he strongly opposed any idea of the evolution of man from animals, and never allowed the material to blind his perceptions of the spiritual.

Sir William was President of the British Association in 1886. He had been a Fellow of the Royal Society since 1862, and received the honour of K.C.M.G. in 1884. With all his high attainments and busy life, he was an earnest and devoted Christian worker. "The Bible," he said, "has been my strength from day to day." To enumerate the many books he wrote would be tedious. They cover a wide field; but in all he has fearlessly maintained the authority of Holy Scripture as a Divine revelation, and that no true science can contradict it. Though firm and decided in opinion and action, Sir William was personally of a gentle, and even and venerated in both hemispheres, and his loss deferential, disposition. His loss will be deeply deplored throughout the civilized world.

The New Whitefield Tabernacle.

THE opening of this church, in the Tottenham Court Road, was celebrated on Tuesday last week. There were three meetings, and large congregations assembled. Dr. Parker preached the opening sermon at noon; at four o'clock Rev. F. W. Macdonald addressed a crowded congregation; and in the evening Sir George Williams presided at a public meeting.

Giving some particulars of the enterprise, the pastor, Rev. G. A. Suttle, said the church had cost £14,000, towards which £7,000 had been raised. He then read a long list of subscribers, in which the names of the Archbishop of Canterbury and other prominent public men were included. During the day the sum of £930 was raised in gifts and promises.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR NOV. 26.

OUR RETURN FOR THE LORD'S BENEFITS.—Psa. cxvi. 12-19.

GOD'S benefits are here compared to a cup or chalice brimming with salvations. The plural form indicates the number and variety of God's manifold gifts; and the figure of the cup may refer to the Passover ritual, in which it became the custom in later times to lift high the wine-cup at the feast, and drink it with solemn invocation and glad thanksgiving. Thus our Lord took the cup—the cup of blessing—and gave thanks. But even if the allusion here is not to that sacred and time-honoured institution, it is quite natural to speak of man's lot, either of sorrow or joy, as the cup of which he drinks. "My cup runneth over."

The cup or lot of our life brims with instances of God's saving help; and, in a kind of despair, we ask how we may thank God enough. What shall we render unto Him for all his gracious help? There are many answers, and this is the first we will take. In other words, as one, already quoted, has truly said, Taking from God is the best giving to God, and is certainly our best requital. God loves to give. St. James says: He is "the giving God" who gives, not liberally, but simply, with no thought of personal advantage, but for the mere joy of giving. What, then, will gratify Him more than to be trusted, to find recipients for his gifts, to know that we are prepared to be his poor debtors, owing him 10,000 talents, with nothing to pay, but still receiving and receiving from his Heart of Love. Nothing hurts God more than that we should not take. When we stand with clenched hands, refusing to appropriate his proffered boons, we inflict the greatest indignity and dishonour of which we are capable.

It is good also to call upon his name. There is an old legend, we are told, of an enchanted cup filled with poison, and put treacherously into a king's hand. He signed the sign of the cross, and named the name of God over it—and it shivered in his grasp. Take the name of the Lord as a test. Name the name which is above every name over all cups of which you are at all doubtful. Friendships, schemes, plans, profits, amusements, studies—all these cups should be tested by this one mighty talisman.

Be sure, also, to pay your vows. We make vows in our trouble, which we do not always keep when it is overpast. Remember Eccl. v. 4, 5. But, surely, it is the height of ingratitude not to redeem our promissory notes. If you have taken on you the vow of consecration, dare not to recall it. All devoted things, which are laid on God's altar, are absolutely his, and the giver forfeits all rights to their disposal. The least reciprocation of all God's benefits is to pay the vows you made in your hours of anguish. The Psalmist reiterates his resolve (14, 18).

Our gratitude demands the gift of ourselves (16). What a deep and blessed word is here, "Truly, I am thy servant." Perhaps truly might be rendered, only

Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do.

When, in our childhood's favourite romance, Robinson Crusoe freed the poor captive from his captors, the man knelt before his deliverer, and put his foot upon his neck, in token of his desire to be his very slave. The love of Christ, who died for all, constrains those who live, not to live to themselves, but unto Him.

How much we owe to our mothers. "The son of thine handmaiden!" They first taught us that Jesus could loose our bonds. Then we came to Him, and He cut the cords which bound us, and, now being made free, we again become (willing) slaves. Loosed from all the cords of sin, we become bound to the service of love.

Lastly, offer the sacrifices of thanksgiving. Hosea says that the offering of our lips is equivalent to bullocks. And in the Epistle to the Hebrews we are bidden to offer up the fruit of lips which make confession to his name, as a sacrifice of praise. Let us then praise God more, with heart and voice, in public and private, causing the voice of his praise to be heard.

But, ah, Eternity's too short
To utter half his praise.

Church of England.

The General Committee of the C.M.S. have sanctioned the formation of a medical mission in South London, and the opening of a hostel for lady students. The former (for women and children) will be under the direction of a lady doctor and a special trained nurse. There will also be accommodation for a general superintendent, and for eleven or twelve ladies who will go for a three months' course of medical training.

The contributions to the Leeds Church Extension Fund, which was opened some months ago, amount, up to the present, to over £30,000. Already, as the result of the movement, three new clergy, out of thirty required, are at work in the city, two new buildings are on the point of being erected, grants of £2,000 each have been made towards the erection of two new churches, and fourteen sites for parish churches and mission churches have been secured.

In connection with recent reports as to the relations existing between the Bishop of London and certain of his clergy who are affected by the Lambeth judgment, The Times is authorized to state that the Bishop has had an amicable discussion with three East-End incumbents as to the possible issue of the present struggle. He explained to them the mode of procedure that might be followed out in case continued resistance on their part compelled him to institute a prosecution, but his action in the matter has, so far, been friendly rather than threatening.

Congregational.

Rev. J. F. Munro has just celebrated the semi-jubilee of his pastorate at Farnworth. The school in which the congregation formerly met has been enlarged on several occasions; while the church buildings, which were erected in 1884, have already become too small, and an extension has been resolved upon.

It has been decided to take down the Congregational Church at Churchtown, Southport (Rev. S. Firth), which is the mother Congregational Church of the town and district, and erect a new and larger building, to meet the needs of the growing population. The present church accommodates 450. The new one is to hold 700, and cost £3,000, one-third of which has already been contributed.

A gentleman who prefers to remain anonymous has offered to place his mansion, and considerable lands adjoining, at the disposal of the Hants Congregational Union, to be used as a home of rest for ministers, students, and evangelists, and for missionaries at home on sick leave, the proposed home to be open not only to Congregationalists, but to Baptists and Presbyterians also. A committee was appointed to consider the scheme in all its bearings.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, speaking recently on the relation of Congregationalism to the masses, said he had set his heart on getting set on foot, by the Free Church Council, a definite proposal to put down in every village a resident minister or evangelist connected with one or other of the Evangelical Free Churches. He believed it was in the villages, and amidst the scattered populations, that a very large proportion of the strength of the churches had hitherto been raised, and he believed that would continue to be the case. But it was no less a duty to think of the condition of our large towns.

Baptist.

Letters received by the last mail from Bloemfontein indicate that the services in the English Baptist Church were still being conducted by Rev. J. Edgar Ennals.

Rev. A. E. Dearden, Manchester College evangelist, has just concluded a fortnight's special services at Zion Chapel, Bramley, Yorks, with encouraging results. During the mission Mr. Dearden and the pastor (Rev. J. C. Taylor) visited a large number of non-church-goers, and also every public-house in the town.

Speaking at a recent meeting at Manchester, Rev. Dr. McLaren said the ordinary churches and chapels did not attract the non-church-going and non-chapel-going classes of the community, and that if they were to depend on the regular churches and chapels the evangelization of a place like Manchester would seem to be utterly hopeless. He rejoiced in the honest work by well-meaning people being done for the elevation of the lower classes. But it was not pictures and flowers and music and lectures that were going to change the hearts of the masses of our people, and until their hearts were changed there could not be much good done. There was only one lever that would heave up the depressed levels of our great communities, and that was the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Methodist.

Dr. W. G. Torr, principal of Way College, Adelaide, who has been in England on holiday for the last six months, sailed for Australia recently in thoroughly recuperated health.

An interesting statement has been published showing that nearly two-thirds of the amount required to complete the the Twentieth Century Fund of the Wesleyan Methodists has been promised, the exact amount being 663,388 guineas. Of this sum £128,738 has been already remitted to the treasurers.

One of the most vigorous of Wesleyan Mission Bands, that connected with the London Central Mission, Clerkenwell, held its annual meeting last week. Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on the power of a consecrated life. The band distributes large numbers of tracts and conducts seven large open-air services weekly. Its brass band processions the district every Sunday night before the service. It also has a "button-hole" brigade and a lodging-house brigade.

At the anniversary of Bolton Wesleyan Mission, Rev. C. A. Andrews gave a highly encouraging report of the work. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, speaking on Missions, said there was no need to be afraid of Methodism as a spiritual agency. They had as their aim a simplicity of purpose, viz., the salvation of the souls of the people. Spiritual work was what a Church ought to do, and he believed that to-day Methodism stood wonderfully clear of all entanglements, and was so concentrating itself upon spiritual work as to be a greater blessing to men now than it had ever been since the days of John Wesley.

Presbyterian.

Rev. John More, of Woolwich, has had leave of absence granted to him by the Presbytery of London South in view of his appointment as Presbyterian chaplain to the forces in South Africa.

At a meeting of the Standing Committees of the Free Church held in Edinburgh last week, Rev. Dr. Walter Ross Taylor, Glasgow, was unanimously nominated as Moderator of next General Assembly, in succession to Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch Hill, has accepted an invitation (received through Principal Dykes, D.D., and Rev. Dr. Duff, of Glasgow) from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales to visit that colony, and supply the pulpit of Rev. John Walker, of Woolahra, Melbourne, whilst Mr. Walker is engaged in pleading the interests of the Australian Twentieth Century Fund.

Society of Friends.

A special mission has been held at Pangbourne. It was a season of much blessing. The service of Charles Goddard has been owned of the Lord, with the result that professed conversions have taken place every evening, and the hearts of many have been made glad.

Ellwood Brockbank has visited Shipston-on-Stour. He took part in the men's and junior schools, the morning meeting for worship, and the afternoon and evening Gospel meetings. All the meetings were well attended, and the addresses were exceedingly helpful.

John F. Hanson recently wrote from Stavanger: "We are holding parlour meetings in different parts of the town. We get people to come who hardly ever attend any meetings. They are seasons of spiritual profit, and we have some bright conversions in them. We hold them at 8 p.m., after work hours.

Writing from Constantinople, A. M. Burgess says: "Our meetings have a sign of real and increasing life, and the members and attenders are offering themselves to aid in some extra meetings, hoping that some outsiders may be induced to attend by a special effort. I want to form a Band of Mercy among our Sunday School children, and if I could have some magic lantern slides that would help the children to understand better the life and habits of birds and insects and domestic animals they would be a great help in the work. The Turks are much kinder to animals than the Christians of this country."

Fallen Asleep.

Miss Eliza Wigham, whose death took place in Dublin last week, was a well-known member of the Society of Friends in Edinburgh, where she was closely identified with many religious and social movements.—Mrs. Daindridge, a member in Brockley Wesleyan Circuit.—Mrs. Watson, wife of Rev. F. Russell Watson, of Upton Park Wesleyan Church, and formerly of Edinburgh Mission.—The death of Captain Milbourne, an old Newcastle-on-Tyne Baptist worthy, is reported from Fairford, Gloucester.—Rev. Jas. Bevan, of Whitchurch, near Cardiff, where he had been pastor of the Welsh Baptist Church for nearly fifteen years, and was a brother beloved and a faithful minister.—By the death of Rev. William Griffith, of Croydon, in his eighty-third year, the Congregational Churches of Surrey have lost their oldest minister. He had laboured at Keyworth, Hitchin, and Eastbourne, and removed to Croydon in 1879.—Rev. John Hutchison, the successor of Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers in the pastorate of Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne. After thirty-three years of service there he recently retired from the pastorate. Mr. Hutchison was chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union.

Kitchen Art.

Modern Cookery is the most useful and important of the domestic arts, and, since the advent of Bovril as a culinary necessity, has made rapid strides in mansion and cottage alike. What can be achieved with a Bottle of Bovril is well known to those who have succeeded in coupling high-class cookery with strict economy. By its aid rich, nourishing soups and gravies can be prepared with astonishing ease and celerity and at the smallest possible cost.

Bovril is a nutrient of absolute purity, thoroughly assimilable by even the most delicate invalid.

Oxford Letter.

"RITUALISTIC Societies in Oxford" was the subject of a lecture given on Wednesday by Mr. Walter Walsh, author of "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement." Mr. E. G. Hemmerde, of University College, presided. The object of the lecturer was to emphasize the fact that we have a large number of societies working in the Church of England, and that these societies were so many wire-pullers of the Ritualistic movement. He showed that in Oxford we have four of these societies actively engaged in propagating the tenets of Rome:—The Society of the Holy Cross, pledged to restore the Confessional; the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, established mainly to bring back the Mass; the Guild of All Souls, introducing prayers for the dead, and teaching the doctrine of Purgatory; and the English Church Union, which the lecturer described as a Romanizing and rebel organization. Mr. Walsh gave the names of the Oxford clergy who are members of these organizations. Referring to the Ritualistic Sisterhoods, he said that at the present time there were more Sisters of Mercy and nuns in England than before the Reformation.

The anniversary meetings of the C.E.T.S. (Oxford branch) were held last week. The gathering on Monday, in the Town Hall, was a helpful one. Its keynote was "Work." The past was full of encouragement; and, while there was much in the present to be regretted, notably the apathy of many who should have the work on their hearts, yet the gigantic evil called for renewed effort, and hardly any sacrifice would be too great which would result in a diminution of this national degradation.

Mr. Bourne drew attention to the report of the Licensing Commission. He showed that even the trade admitted that some reform was necessary, and joined with the rest of the Commission in acknowledging that the number of public-houses should be reduced, and that the law should be simplified, amended, and consolidated. All agreed, moreover, that no liquor should be served to any child under sixteen. They did not agree, however, on the question of Sunday closing, the trade asking for two hours at midday and two in the evening. It may be doubted whether any permanent good can result from an alliance between the trade and the temperance party; yet the Commission has brought us to a new stage in temperance agitation. All were agreed that something must be done, and if the trade can only be persuaded that the rights of the public override any rights that they themselves possess, something will be done.

The rector of St. Clement's reminded the audience that he had appealed to the magistrates, almost with tears, not to put an extra spirit licence in his parish. He presented a paper, signed by the majority of the householders, supporting his appeal. But because the magistrates wished to get rid of some licences in the centre of the city, they put this extra one in his poor parish. The statement elicited cries of "Shame," and the meeting was thoroughly roused when the rector went on to say that the history of the drink in the poor parts of Oxford was one of shame, of suffering, of disgrace, of disease, and of death. A resolution was passed urging upon the members of Parliament for the city, county, and University the need of immediate legislation along the lines of the Commission.

The autumn session of the Free Church Council for Oxford was held on Monday, at which Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, was one of the speakers. He said that the principle emphasized by the Federation was the right of the individual soul to enter into fellowship with its Maker without the interference of prelate, prince, or priest. They recognized that they were Christians first, then Protestants, then Evangelicals, then Free Churchmen, and last of all, denominationalists. He denied that they existed as an organization to protest against the dominance of the Church of England. He confessed that if so he would be no exponent of Free Church principles, for the first great spiritual impulse he ever received was received under the influence of the Church of England.

We cull a few points from a remarkable speech—a speech full of unction and grace, made in the spirit of the Master: "The Church was where Christ was." "The priests had been the enemy, not only of liberty of conscience, but of independence of thought." "The shadow of the priest was upon the land." "Every holy man was a priest, and every pious woman had taken orders." "The succession of Christian experience, the progressiveness of Christian conscience, the succession of Christ-filled men, were the only Apostolic succession worthy of the name." Those who heard Mr. Campbell will not soon forget his words.

The Barefoot Mission.

CONTINUED devotion to the cause of the Ragged School Union was shown by the Baroness Burdett Coutts when opening a sale of work on behalf of the Barefoot Mission on November 16. The sale took place in the Marlborough Room of the Polytechnic, Regent Street, and there was a very full attendance. Mr. W. C. Parkinson, L.C.C., presided, and Mr. Charles Montague explained the objects for which the Barefoot Mission existed, and expressed the feelings of the Council of the Ragged School Union as a body when he heartily welcomed her ladyship to the sale. The object was to help poor children whose parents were unable to help themselves. During the year they had given away over 47,000 garments, besides thousands of pairs of boots. Other friends having spoken, the Baroness acknowledged the kindness with which she had been greeted.

The Y.M.C.A.

AT the Manchester Association, interesting addresses were given, at a special gathering last week, by Rev. Dr. Snelson (from the West Coast of Africa) and by Mr. Hardman from the Niger. Subsequently, questions on missionary work were asked by the members, and answered by the two speakers.

The new Association at Redhill held a special meeting on the 15th inst., when Mr. D. C. Apperly (the president) welcomed a large number of members who have joined of late.

Mr. W. C. East, late of Bournemouth, the newly-appointed general secretary of the old-established Association at The Priory, Islington, was warmly welcomed to office at a recent meeting of members.

The third annual meeting of the Coloured Men's Christian Association, which is in affiliation with the Y.M.C.A., was recently held at Cape Town. The Association has held some helpful religious and social meetings, and, through its restaurant, has supplied during the past year a large number of free meals.

The new hall of the Stellenbosch (South Africa) Y.M.C.A. has been formally inaugurated, Rev. Andrew Murray taking part in the proceedings. Professor Hofmeyr informed the meeting that the hall had cost £3,000, and that there was not a penny of debt outstanding.

Personalia.

DR. STEWART, Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, hopes to return shortly to the shores of Lake Nyassa.

PROFESSOR FREDERIC GODET, of Neuchatel, has attained his eighty-seventh year. In spite of his extraordinary age, he still works with much vigour, to the astonishment of his many friends.

Mr. F. S. YOUNG, M.A., late Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford, has been appointed headmaster of the Nonconformist Grammar School, Bishop's Stortford, vacated by the death of Rev. R. Alliott, M.A. Mr. Young was himself educated at the school, from which he also gained the Open Scholarship for Natural Science he held at Oxford. Since taking his degree, he has been an assistant-master at Mill Hill School, where he has had much experience of the education and training of boys. Mr. Young enters upon his new duties when the school re-opens in January, 1900.

City Work Girls.—More workers are needed for City workrooms; also one is much desired to reside with the hon. secretary in the north of London. Address: Mrs. Fisher, Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

THE Lord's people have been greatly cheered by the manifestation of his power in connection with special services conducted by Mr. S. LEVERMORE, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. BAKER, the blind singers from Philadelphia. The mission commenced with a children's service in the Congregational Church, when a large number of young people were addressed by Mr. Charles Hall. On the same evening, Mr. Levermore preached at the Town Hall. Services were held on subsequent evenings in the Congregational, Wesleyan, and Baptist Churches. The interest was well sustained, and under the earnest appeals of the missioner and the sweet songs of the blind singers, many were led to a confession of Christ as their Saviour, while the Lord's people were urged to a fuller consecration of life to his service. London Tent Work.

A CORRESPONDENT sends an interesting communication, illustrative of the spirit aroused by the London tent work.

On a recent Saturday afternoon, a lad of fourteen, with two young friends, all lately converted under Mr. Van de Venter, at the Lavender Hill tent, decided to make an effort to get some of the rougher class of men to attend the services. In pursuit of this aim the lads entered the crowded tap-room of a public-house. While there, a man seized hold of one of the three, and proceeded to put questions to him, the lad replying by telling, with earnestness and simplicity, the story of Jesus' love. At this, another of the drinking men took up a pint pot from which he had been drinking, and threw the contents on the floor, crying, "Here goes; I've done with it. I'm going to the tent with this lad." This individual, with six others, left the public-house and followed the boys to the tent. The party took their seats, and, after a time, the man who had led the way requested that his wife and children should be fetched by the leader of the three young workers. She was accordingly invited, but refused to come.

During the service, her husband evinced considerable interest, and proceeded to inform the public of his presence, exclaiming, "Here, this lad made me throw away a pot of beer in a public-house." At the conclusion of the meeting, he asked for prayer, and expressed a determination to forsake his drinking habits and become a better man. He left the tent with his young friend, and, as they walked along, he noticed his wife standing by the public-house. Observing her husband, she screamed, "Come in, Bill," but the reply was, "Not me; I've done with it." After obtaining his assurance that he would continue to attend the meetings, the lad left him. Some days later, one of the man's children brought the news that his father was "still a tectotaler."

A twelve days' mission, conducted by Mr. JOHN HAWKINS at the Railway Mission Hall, Norwich. On Sunday the building was crowded, and as a result of the earnest declaration of Gospel truth many were blessed. J. N.

A general Church mission was held last week in Sheffield. The attendances were large and representative of many sections of the community. Archdeacon EYRE, and other prominent preachers, took part. We hope to give fuller particulars next week.

Rev. D. M. CAMERON has returned to Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.E., after concluding four weeks' work at Glasgow in connection with the evangelistic campaign, and a week's mission in Cromarty Free Church. Divine power was manifested and souls yielded to Christ.

Mr. H. STAFFORD SMITH, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a mission at Pembroke. The truth was presented in a clear and effective manner. One of the largest chapels in the town was full at the closing service. The children's services were particularly interesting.

Mr. C. E. BARRACLOUGH has conducted a fortnight's evangelistic meetings at the Old Arcade Mission, Sunderland. There was blessing from first to last; believers were quickened and backsliders reclaimed, while sinners sought salvation. The story of one has made a deep impression. He heard the Word preached, left the service, and went to his lodgings, but only to return for the evangelist to speak personally to him about salvation. He is now, with many more, rejoicing in Christ.

A week's mission has just been concluded at the new Mission Church of St. Mark (Rev. G. H. Lander), in the growing parish of Litherland, near Liverpool. A few years ago, Litherland was a pleasant country

"The Return to the Gospel."

SUCH is the title of the Murtle Lecture, delivered by Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) last Sunday week in the Mitchell Hall of Aberdeen University; and, did it stand alone, it would form a very complete vindication of those who, for a generation past, have complained that preachers had, to a large extent, gone away from the Gospel. If there is a return, there was once a departure. And Dr. Watson admits it in terms as plain and as serious as ever it was affirmed. Mr. Spurgeon could hardly have wished for anything more emphatic. After describing in his own lucid manner the change which has come over preaching, he is compelled to admit that people do not come to hear sermons prepared with great pains, and, perhaps, too many sacrifices of faith.

Why is this? Dr. Watson says there has been

Only one loss, but we are beginning to find that it is very serious. One misses certain notes of the former preaching which were very impressive, and whose echoes still fall upon our ears with grave, sweet melody, such as the profound sense of spiritual reality, an affectionate urgency in exhorting men to flee from hell and to lay hold on heaven, an unaffected interest in human souls, and an intense devotion to Jesus Christ. . . . To-day preaching is more intellectual and practical. In the former time it was more spiritual and evangelical. What we miss with unexpressed regret is the ancient and winsome sound of the everlasting Gospel.

To what is this sad loss due? To two causes, against both of which most believers who have stood firm in evangelical truth have uttered persistent and solemn, if unheeded, warnings; to Bible criticism and to sacerdotalism. Dr. Watson thinks that they were inevitable, and have served some good purposes. It is hard to follow him here; for where is the inevitableness and usefulness of criticism which "chills to the heart," and, with few exceptions, makes a man "cease to evangelize"? And where is the advantage of having the official priest, who is "the natural foe of the Gospel"? Dr. Watson has let these foes off too cheaply.

But what does he want now? He predicts an evangelical revival, because "it is due," and the two foes are practically done with.

All signs go to show that the Church is sick of what is negative, and hungers for what is positive. Upon her mind are lying the burden of human misery, the divisions of society, and the despair of the poor. For those problems she desires the solution, and for those people she desires the message, and there has never been any other than the Gospel.

We notice that Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, himself once too negative, as Dr. Watson has been, is demanding the same thing, the positive, the objective in the Gospel, an atonement in reality, not in sentiment. These are significant confessions of faith, and hope, and desire, from men of prominent position and commanding influence. The Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England could not have inaugurated his year of office with a weightier or a more welcome deliverance. We have not forgotten something he wrote in The Expositor on "Grace," and we know that he believes in redemption by our Saviour's propitiation. He has now done not a little to fulfil his own prophecy.

Preachers will again stand in the pulpit as the messengers of God, rebuking men boldly for their sins in the name of the Eternal, and assuring the penitent of the Divine Mercy, declaring with confidence that Christ has finished the work of salvation, and offering that salvation without money and without price unto all who believe. There will be a sure word for the minister to carry to the guilty sinner whose conscience cries aloud in its agony, and a comfortable word for the dying, when they are face to face with eternity.

It is for this time of power that many are praying; and, certainly, the signs are in its direction. May it soon come. G.

A Forecast of Judgment.—2.

By Rev. JOHN SMITH, D.D.

HERE we touch another aspect of this godless spirit. In earlier and healthier days men used God's gifts to augment his praise. In v. 5 we have an interesting individual note from Amos, about David, to the effect that he invented instruments of music. And so our fathers used poetry and painting, and sculpture and architecture, to glorify God. But the aim of this spirit is to evacuate all these activities of the human soul of any reference to God, and to use them as a means of several gratifications. "They invent to themselves," &c. They drink wine out of the holy sacrificial vessels; they anoint themselves with the chief ointments sacred to the service of God.

Yes, the hoof of human self-will has trampled down everything to our sensual level. To it there is no holy place, no supreme authority to which man must bow, no reserves of reverence and awe. All the resources of life must be used for man's pleasure, and even religion must be turned into a ritual satisfying to the so-called religious emotions of the soul—a source of refined pleasure and excitement.

Let us not mistake. That tone and attitude are far too common. And do not, I beseech you, deplore and then dismiss the matter from your thoughts. God cannot be at peace with that spirit, nor with what springs of it. If it was intolerable to Him that men should be untrue to his purpose in Israel, what must He feel to those who are thus despising

HIS REVELATION IN CHRIST?

As if Christ had never died, as if the Holy Ghost had never been sent forth to apply the revelation of Christ, as if God the Father had never discovered his purpose of grace, multitudes live on the supposition that life is their own affair, that they can do what they please with all the gifts of God, and turn them to their own immediate pleasure. Rest assured that cannot go on. If there be a God in heaven, that spirit has to be subdued, either by a mighty revival shaking the dry bones to life, or by a stroke of God's hand.

And if we reflected aright, this should be a concern to us all. God's people should be abounding in prayer for their generation. Christians should be labouring as they have opportunity to arouse the careless, to encourage the despondent, to warn the rebellious. There may hang on how we rise to meet the emergency more than we can tell.

Nothing escapes the Prophet. He is dealing with actual men, and yet he hits off the perennial elements of all moral decay in a community. And now another feature comes in. "They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph." Lapped in their own selfish enjoyment, they let the nation go to wreck and ruin. The sufferings of the people by invasion and famine are nothing to them. How this lawless selfishness is erecting itself in our times—men plotting on the Stock Exchange, careless how they may injure others; combinations of traders controlling the manufacture and output of certain articles, in order to appreciate their value; every sort of artifice to inflate bogus companies and drive into them flocks of unthinking investors; as baits for fraudulent financial schemes. What care they what happens to the nation, or industry, or the people, if they enrich themselves!

NOBLEMEN SELLING THEIR TITLES

And what saith the Prophet? "Therefore shall they go captive with the first that go captive." Ay, that is always God's way. In recent years, from the days of the Liberator frauds, how God has been bringing, in scores and dozens, these avaricious schemers to light. Providence has been pillorying these products of our modern civilization, till our journals groan with the revelations. Ay, says the prophet, "and the riotous screech of their banquets shall be removed." Yes, thank God, glittering splendour and vulgar extravagance, based not on one honest day's work by which the world is richer, but on financial juggling and clever exploiting of the labours of others, may have a day, and in that day exert a baleful influence, not only on individuals, but on the counsels of nations. But they have no permanence. Sowing the wind, they will reap the whirlwind. What remains of the debauchery of the Restoration, or of the profligacy rampant in the era of the Regency? Merely a screech—the rumour of their vileness.

III. And now we change our standpoint. We have been looking at the state of things in Samaria more than 2,500 years ago. We have been looking through the glass of the prophet upon such elements of the present as correspond to some features of that condition. And we have seen that the portraiture is to the life. Characters and events, owing their existence to the latest occurrences in the field of history, have their true inwardness discovered in this old record.

What a busy scene it is, this actual hour throughout this world-empire of Britain! How eager we all are, as individuals and a nation, to stand well before ourselves and the world! What a murmur of criticism, rising in long-drawn diapason from blame to praise, fills the whole land. We even sweep in all that continental nations say of us as food for reflection. But there is one judgment of infinitely more importance for us than all others, of which we seldom think, a judgment which never flags, overlooking nothing, forgetting nothing—the judgment of God. We swear, one by one fallible authority, another by another, and so in many things we can come to no final solution. On this higher plan nothing goes by default. The Lord hath sworn by Himself. Everything in us and about us is carried up into the circle of his great thought, is seen in the full light of his eye.

True, because his vision is so piercing, his is a tolerant and a patient judgment. Great though He be, the Omniscient God does not leap to conclusions. We are his creatures, made for Himself; while there is one unrealized possibility of our

FULFILLING HIS END

He delays. But when He moves to judgment, the whole of Him moves. The Lord God hath sworn by Himself. His whole honour is now committed to his own action. Here He makes known his decision through his prophet. But generally He speaks in the thunder of events. How is He going to speak in the events of the coming months and years?

That He has ground of righteous quarrel with us as a people—deeper, mayhap, than any of us dream—we can well believe. And He has two ways of acting, and only two: to wean men from, or to consume them in, their sins. I pray God that his way with us may be the former. That He may break up the fallow ground, and send forth the rain from heaven; that He may quicken his church through all her borders to believing prayer and bolder witness; that He may, by his Holy Spirit, through his Church, convince the world of sin and righteousness and judgment; that, standing between the living and the dead, his praying people may bring down blessing and avert judgment; that there may be multitudes in the valley of decision.

But look what He says about Israel—the Lord swearing by Himself: "I abhor the excellency of Jacob." God judges us in time, by what we delight in, build upon, hope for. Here our lives are in the making; only when our life product is done will He, in the last grand assize, judge us by our deeds. And so God's question is regarding every man: What does He boast in?

WHAT DO YOU BOAST IN?

God is going past our public professions, past our creeds, to what is the secret boast of our hearts, and He labels us accordingly. What was the boast of Samaria then? They could do as they liked; they had richer furniture than other people; they rioted in pleasure; they invaded the sanctities of life in their unbounded licence. "I abhor," says the Covenant God, "the excellency of Jacob." Astronomers can weigh the globe out; but who can weigh that one word "abhor"? God Himself had been their excellency. They had chosen Him, and He had given Himself to their loving embrace. And now, instead of Him, they have chosen this fleeting material good. "I abhor the excellency of Jacob."

O my soul, everything thou hast thou owest to the mercy of God. He drew thee from the horrible pit; again and again He has forgiven thy offences. He has prevented thee, when ready to fall, with the blessings of goodness; when thou wert ready to perish, He has rescued thee. And all this despite sins that cover thee with confusion. Why He has not abhorred we have often wondered. Ah! if He were to abhor us; if all his grace were to cease; if only his anger were let loose, where should we be?

The prophet draws a marvellous picture in verses 9-11. The judgment of God has come. By plague, invasion, manifold calamity, the town is depleted. Hardly a soul survives to bury the dead. Into one house where ten men once lived a relation goes—not according to Jewish wont to do the last tender offices for the dead. He will take out the bones and burn them in the yard. At last, in an inmost chamber, he finds one still alive. He cries, "Are there any more surviving?" The poor sufferer cries "No," and then is about to cry in God's name for mercy, when his relative rudely interrupts him, "Hold thy tongue. We dare not speak of Jehovah; He is only our enemy now."

But turn from these terrors. The prophet proceeds to expostulate. And here he uses a figure which brings in features of Palestine before my mind. It is very rough-going in Palestine; and in the region where Amos was, about Bethel and some distance northward toward Shechem, you can only ascend and descend the hills on the most trying rock ladders, where every footstep must be carefully placed among projecting and broken rocks, and often one is reduced

ALMOST TO DESPAIR.

Now, says the prophet, would you expect horses to run upon that rock? Would you go there and plough with oxen in expectation of a harvest? Of course not: you all recognise a natural fitnesss of things—that there is a constitution of nature to which we must conform. But you utterly ignore the fact that there is a moral order in the universe. You turn judgment into gall, and righteousness into wormwood; you put your trust in vanity. Dependent for every breath you draw, you boast your own self-sufficiency, and you fancy that all will be well, as if you had conformed to the will of God.

There is a saying, almost hackneyed, of Carlyle's, to the effect that those western nations who refused light in the Reformation had to accept the lightning of the Revolution. And now Jehovah says, You will not have Me as Lord; well, you must have Me as punitive providence. "I will raise up a nation, O house of Israel, saith the Lord of Hosts, and they shall afflict you." That was to be the end of their carnal security—the Assyrian at the gate—Sargon and Sennacherib ravaging their empire from end to end.

Surely there are some lessons from this theme which should be burned into every mind and heart. There is a God with whom we have to do; a moral government of the world which we cannot with impunity violate; a perfect control of all events to execute moral purposes; a scene of probation in which, by a material discipline, we are taught moral lessons and are being trained in moral character. Oh! my friends, enter into this, the true meaning of the present; barter not your soul for evanescent and perishable things. Choose God, enter in at the strait gate, and press on in the narrow way. As Herbert sings:

> If thou do ill, the joy fades, not the pains;
> If well, the pains do fade, the joy remains.

Caution.—Some of our readers having received copies of a circular signed "Frances Ashdown," appealing for funds "in aid of the wounded in the war," we think it right to state (as the fact does not appear on the circular) that it emanates from the Kilburn Sisters, two of whom "are going at once to the Transvaal." Our readers know this Sisterhood, and the suppression of its identity in the circular does not tend to inspire confidence; nor is it clear what, if any, access to the soldiers will be permitted to the Sisters on arrival.

Missionaries and the War.

MR. SPENCER WALTON, of the South Africa General Mission, writes:—

"Our position as missionaries, in the midst of the present war, is one of neutrality. I do not mean that we are to forget our country and its claims; but as messengers of peace, whose weapons are not carnal, we are called upon to wield the greatest weapon—one God has placed in the hands of his children—prayer. The black war-clouds, which have been gathering for months, suddenly, like a clap of thunder, pealed out the word 'war.' Undoubtedly it will be very sanguinary. Refugees have poured forth from Johannesburg, Pretoria, and the Transvaal and Free State, like a great river of humanity, emptying itself in Natal and the Cape Colony, as well as Delagoa Bay. Thousands, with nothing to do, and but little prospects of work, are crowding the streets, eager for the latest news. The thrifty are securing rooms and eking out their savings; others are drowning their sorrows in the canteens, and will soon become destitute, while some have come down destitute, not a few being women and children. If the war lasts long, the outlook is indeed worse than gloomy.

"I am writing this at Lorrenzo Marques. Last Wednesday I left Durban to try to meet our refugee missionaries from Swazieland. The Swiss missionaries have welcomed me, and I am at present stopping with them. Their mission is for the Tongas, and their work is much blessed. There is a lovely air of sanctity in this home, and the blessed restfulness is cooling and refreshing in the midst of this wicked place.

"The town is full of canteens of the lowest description, most of them the haunts of drunkenness and immorality. It is and into the awful traps many of the young miners and others are falling.

"Yesterday I visited the Anglican bishop, who has a small church here, seeking to rouse him to arrange a united service for the hundreds of Britishers who are passing through. I met with no success, however. Open-air preaching is strictly forbidden, and any services in any building must be sanctioned by the Governor. This takes time, and any amount of 'red tape' has to be gone through.

"The cloud of sorrow is over us as a mission, but truly 'He giveth songs in the night.' We have been obliged to close our five mission stations in Swazieland, as well as our four churches and native evangelist training home, and remove our missionaries to a place of safety from the Boer war, and probable Swazie rising. This is a very great trial to us all, and we did not act until after much prayer and waiting upon God. The stations, churches, evangelists, and Swazie Christians are all in his hand, and we are at rest. At present they are all camped on the top of the Lebombo Mountains, about forty-five miles from here, with the two waggons and two spans of oxen, some cows, and three horses.

"October 19.—Since writing the above, two of our missionaries came in on horseback to say they are in Portuguese territory. Through the kindness of the Christian judge at Bremersdorp, they all got away in safety, but only just in time to save oxen and waggons being commandeered. They join me here next week, and I take them all round to Durban. They are very sad at having to close their stations, but resting in God's will. The day they left, a notice was posted up, ordering all English to leave the country at once. Our Swazie Christians will need the prayers of your readers.

"We have had an awful three days: thousands of refugees have been put over the border and sent here. The jails have been thrown open, and the 'short-term' prisoners sent down. The town is in a terrible state. As I am here for a week, I have joined the local relief committee, and am busy from morning to night. Steamers are leaving for Durban crowded—over-crowded; but still they arrive. It is pitiable to see the women and children. The English, headed by the Consul, are doing their best. No steamers are coming for some days; our hearts ache, and as we help the women and children, at times tears will come, and the cry goes up, 'O Lord, how long! how long!' Will your readers pray for us?

"Lorrenzo Marques, Delagoa Bay.

Mr. Arthur Mercer, Secretary of the Mission, also writes: "The work amongst the soldiers is very encouraging. Mr. Smyth, who is usually working in the South Africa General Mission Soldiers' Home, in Pietermaritzburg, has written an interesting line where he was then living in a waggon with four friends, who were doing all they could for the soldiers.

"Mr. Smyth writes of going in and out among the men, and visiting and having them over to see him. They were having meetings twice daily, and there were many bright Christian men present. He could have done much more among the men in the way of refreshments had they the means, but they were much handicapped. To quote a sentence from his letter. 'Many of the lads came to me with money to take care of, or to send home, and other things too, and I have so many addresses to write to—"if anything should happen to me." It is very touching. Please pray very much for us at this time.'"

Thoughts on Sin.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH,

II.—A Fact.

"KNOW ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness" (Rom. vi. 16). Sin is viewed in different aspects in the Word of God. There are at least seven ways in which sin is presented. Within us, as an operating principle (Rom. vii. 18); upon us, as a burdensome weight (Ps. xxxviii. 4); before us, as a lurking monster (Gen. iv. 7); beside us, as a sure detective (Num. xxxii. 23); beyond us, as an accusing witness (1 Tim. v. 24); behind us, as a pursuing foe (1 Tim. v. 24); and over us, as a tyrannical master (Rom. vi. 17). Sin is reviewed in the latter character in the chapter before us; and the practical application is, "No man can serve two masters." Men may deceive themselves by thinking they can serve sin and the Saviour; but the fact is, we belong to whichever one we obey. If we obey sin, we are sin's slaves; and if we obey Christ, we are his subjects.

Shaftesbury Institute Mission.—The "Jane Barclay" Deaconess House, Lisson Grove, N.W., was opened on Wednesday, last week, by a service of dedication. A singularly helpful address was delivered on the occasion by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. We hope to give details of the proceedings next week.

The "Fete des Morts" in Paris.—The opening day of November, as is well known, is a general holiday in Paris. Then the people visit the cemeteries and place flowers on the graves of their friends. This year, as usual, Miss de Broen and her workers distributed tracts and Gospels among the crowds. Miss de Broen is now entering upon the winter's work; her needs are great, and the more so because, since the death of Miss Ker, she has not been able to hold drawing-room meetings as before.

Scriptures for the Paris Exhibition.—The approaching exhibition in Paris will bring together millions of visitors from all parts of the world. A wonderful opportunity will be afforded for the distribution of the Scriptures, and the committee of the Trinitarian Bible Society appeal for funds for this special work, which must necessarily be in proportion to what is contributed. The large quantity of books contemplated cannot be printed at a short notice, so that a commencement must be made forthwith. The secretary is Rev. Dr. Bullinger, 25, New Oxford Street, London.

"Things which must shortly come to Pass."

Zech. xiv.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT is impossible to regard this mysterious and sublime prophecy as having been already fulfilled. There is nothing in the story of the Maccabees, nor in the fall of Jerusalem beneath the arms of Titus, which at all adequately fulfils the conditions of the Prophet's words. From the successive features of the Prophet's delineation, we learn that a time is coming when the nations of the world—which, to adopt a modern phrase, may indicate the concert of European powers—will be in battle, that city being held by the Jews, as yet in unbelief. And we can hardly doubt that Zechariah is here anticipating the same events as are described by Ezekiel, when the great nations of the north come against "the land that is brought back from the sword, and gathered out of many peoples, upon the mountains of Israel, to take the spoil and to take the prey (Ezekiel xxxviii., xxxix.).

At first this invasion shall be completely successful. The city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished—hell let loose, and no restraint exerted on the excesses of the infuriated soldiery. Then will the Lord appear to his people, as He did to the typical Jew on the road to Damascus. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when He fought in the day of battle. "Behold," says John, referring to the same event, "He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they which pierced Him, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn over Him." "In that day," to quote Ezekiel's vivid and striking imagery, "saith the Lord, when God shall come against the land of Israel, my fury shall come up into my nostrils, and I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood, and I will rain upon him, and upon his hordes, and upon the many peoples that are with him an overflowing shower, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. And I will magnify myself, and sanctify myself, and I will make myself known in the eyes of many nations."

It is impossible to doubt that, at that time, there will be a literal appearance of the rejected Saviour. Where his feet often stood in the days of his flesh, they shall stand again. His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem, on the East. The Lord my God shall come, and all the holy ones with thee. In other words, there shall be a of the reassuring words of the two men, who, clad in white and glistening raiment, stood beside the Apostles on Olivet.

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven? this Jesus, which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye beheld Him going into heaven" (Acts i. 11). "And it shall be said, in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation. For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down in his place, even as straw is trodden down in the water of the dunghill" (Isa. xxv. 9-10).

It was when his brethren were in their greatest straits that Joseph made himself known unto them, and when the Jews are in their dire extremity, they will cry aloud for help and deliverance from Him whom they rejected. That memorable scene in the ancient land of the pyramids will be reproduced in all its pathos, when the long-rejected Brother shall say to his own brethren after the flesh, "I am Jesus, your Brother, whom ye sold unto Pilate; and now be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye delivered me up to be crucified, for God did send me before you to preserve a remnant in the earth, and to save you alive by a great deliverance." (See Gen. xlv. 1-15.)

When this final reconciliation shall have taken place, when the mutual blessings and embracings have effaced the memory of the bitter past, when the chosen people shall have recognised their great Deliverer, He will set Himself to deliver them. It may be that they will recognise Him in the act of their deliverance. The cleaving mountain shall make a way of escape, as of old time the cleaving sea. On that memorable day—one day, which is known unto the Lord, not day, and not night—when the cold and frost (6 R.V. marg.) shall mingle with the throes of earthquake (5)—when the sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood—when atmospheric and cosmical convulsions, accompanying the crisis, give evidence of its momentous character, as the pangs of the travail-hour in which the new age is being born—God "will destroy the face of the covering that is cast over all peoples, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the reproach of his people shall He take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it." How touching and significant are the Prophet's words: It shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light. The day of Israel's history has been long and stormy. For the most part, over her national life, emitting from age to age thunder and deluges of rain; but already there is a rim of light on the horizon, and this is destined to grow until it dispossesses the brooding darkness. The sun shall yet bathe the whole landscape with warm and glowing radiance. At evening time it shall be light.

HEAVY STORM-CLOUDS HAVE BROODED

Whether we shall live to see that evening we cannot tell. But during these latter years, many signs have been giving evidence that we are approaching one of those epoch-making moments in the history of our race which may be called the hinges of the ages. The despair which is settling down on some of the noblest spirits; the excessive devotion to pleasure which engrosses the light and vain; the descent of empire from the gold of imperial autocracy to the iron and clay of the rule of the peoples; the lawless disregard of family ties and sacred institutions; the bitter hatred of the Jewish people, known as anti-Semitism, which, like a contagious fever, has befallen most of the European nations; the interesting movements among the Jews themselves—that known as Zionism, that identified with the name of Rabinovitch in South Russia, and those which are attempting the re-colonization of the land of their fathers—all these announce the near approach of the fulfilment of these words.

And as some of us lately watched the Dreyfus trial, in which the Jewish nation, as represented by a Jew, underwent trial at the hands of France—exposed to virulent hatred, and finally receiving the sentence of condemnation—it seemed as though those stages in the dealings of Joseph with his brethren were being rehearsed, in which he subjected them to the identical treatment to which they had subjected him at the pit's mouth, as preliminary to the full disclosure of his identity, and mercy to their stricken and repentant hearts. It seemed that, in all likelihood, we were watching the first stages of scenes destined to culminate in the public reconciliation of

THE JEWS AND THEIR MESSIAH.

The calculations of the most careful students of prophecy also point to the close of the present century and the beginning of the next as the points at which the times of the Gentiles run out, and at which the chosen people must be restored to their national prerogative, and reinstated as God's representatives before the world. "Now from the fig-tree learn her parable. When her branch is now become tender, and putteth forth its leaves, ye know that the summer is nigh; even so ye also, when ye see these things coming to pass, know ye that He is nigh, even at the doors. . Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is."

Apparently, the land of the Jews is destined to pass through considerable changes, dating from the time of the Lord's interposition on their behalf. The issue of living waters east and west; the depression of the surrounding country to the level of the Arabah, from Gibeah of Saul on the north to Rimmon on the south; the elevation of Jerusalem, as though to a level plateau; and the removal of the curse—are, of course, capable of metaphorical and figurative treatment; but there is no precise reason for doubting that the volcanic action, which is so clearly referred to (verse 5), will produce great modifications of the present landscape.

That the Jews shall be entirely victorious in that last great struggle is abundantly enforced. We learn from Ezekiel's visions of the same event that they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth to make fires of the weapons of their foes, to burn them, so that they shall have no need to gather the wood of the forest for fuel; and that men will have to be set apart for the work of burying the multitudes of the dead. Here, too, we are told that when Judah fights at Jerusalem (not against, see R.V. marg.), the Lord shall smite the opposing hosts with a great plague, before which they shall be consumed; and that there shall be vast spoils of gold and silver, and apparel in great abundance.

THIS, SURELY, IS THE SCENE

which John depicts in marvellous phraseology, thrilling with the splendour of his rich and glowing eloquence: "I saw the heaven opened, and behold, a white horse, and He that sat thereon, called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. And his eyes are as a flame of fire, and upon his head are many diadems, and He hath a name written, which no one knoweth but He Himself. And He is arrayed in a garment, sprinkled with blood, and his name is called the Word of God. And the armies which are in heaven followed Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and pure. And out of his mouth proceedeth a sharp sword, that with it He should smite the nations, and He shall rule them with a rod of iron; and He treadeth the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of God. And He hath on his garments and on his thigh a name written—King of kings and Lord of lords." (Rev. xix. 11-18.)

So all Israel shall be saved. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and all nations shall flow unto it.

The Indian Famine.

As the year draws to a close, the terrible condition of things in India by no means improves, but daily looks blacker. It is much to be feared, amid the manifold political questions now engaging the public attention, coupled with the Transvaal war, that we shall, as a nation, forget our responsibilities to India, and they are in truth heavy. Millions of her natives are actually and literally starving.

Major Conran writes us forcibly on the subject. "It is," says he, "our own subjects, from whom we have been for centuries drawing our millions and prestige in the world, that we are allowing to perish by starvation. You may say 'Government has the power to relieve them,' but Lord Curzon says 'they look for help from all quarters at this crisis.'"

Recalling the misery caused by the "corner" in wheat in America last year, Major Conran says it is just the same thing which is deepening the distress in India. The policy of the Government toward the native speculators seems to be one of non-interference, and nothing is done to control the price of grain. "Our favoured countries" (continues Major Conran) "know little of the experience of famine and lack of corn; but in a land like India, destitute of poor laws and all institutions for the relief of destitution, and ground down by oppressive customs that keep the people in a normal such a crisis as the present finds millions ready material for disease and mortality. Would not the urgency of the case justify a public meeting, and appeal for the interposition of the Lord Mayor? The missionaries are all agreed on the grave aspect of the case. Special sympathy should be felt for that numerous class in India, the females, who will rather die than expose themselves to the indignity of publicity at the public relief camps, to say nothing of many children left without parents or guardians. The late General Sir H. Arthur Cotton left, in his Godavery River irrigation works, a grand object lesson of what may be done in averting the periodical effects of famine in India."

Writing from Ajmere, Rajputana, Miss Lilian E. Marks, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, appeals for help for the natives of her district. Ajmere is the centre of a vast area composed of sixteen states ruled by rajahs, with a population of 12,000,000 souls. "Millions of able-bodied, honest toilers are now wandering from village to village in search of work, water and food, homeless, naked and starving. A few days since, a man killed his little boy, roasted and ate him. When taken to prison he said, 'My stomach did it.' Shortly after he went to sleep and never woke again." Miss Marks tells us that £3 will support an orphan boy or girl for one year. "Many Christians," she says, "are now living on one meal every two or three days."

Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institution, Agar, writes to us:—

Lord Curzon has gone into the famine districts to see with his own eyes the state of matters. The Pioneer, of November 6, speaking of Rajputana, says:—"The cattle have already perished in numbers for want of grass and water, and the provision of a sufficient supply of drinking water for the people in some parts of the country will be a very difficult task. The famine is thus what is popularly known as 'Tirkal' or threefold; and, as the states and districts bordering on the most hardly-stricken tracts are themselves feeling the pinch of want, the usual safety-valve of emigration is choked. The famine is most severe in the British district of Meerwara, where already more than half the population are in receipt of relief."

The population is estimated at 100,000, and 2,000 are in receipt of relief of one kind or another, and in the States of Jodhpur and Jaisulmer. Bikaner is in a ruinous plight, while pressure is already severe in Udaipur, Shahpuri, Kishengurh, Bundi Tonk, Jeypur.

Nothing can save the agricultural stock in the worst tracts; and even if the rains of 1900 were favourable it will be a long time before the effects of the present famine cease to be felt. If rain does not fall in the course of a few weeks a terrible state of matters will exist—famine until the end of September, 1900. I am afraid people at home do not fully understand the meaning of the expression, "Nothing can save the agricultural stock." It means that even when the rains come, there will be no bullocks with which to plough the land. On Sabbath morning, the 5th inst., we had 1,364 poor starving creatures at our Beggars' Church. We are most thankful to friends for sending us assistance for these poor creatures.

Mr. Frank Anderson's Farewell.

At Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Thursday evening, a meeting of members of the Metropolitan and other branches was held to bid God-speed to Mr. Frank Anderson, who is returning to resume his work among students in India.

Sir George Williams presided, and representatives were present from various centres, as well as members of the Colonial and Foreign Committee of the National Council of Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. W. H. Seagram was the first to offer Mr. Anderson hearty congratulations on the success which has attended his labours, both in India and at home. God had evidently called him to return to India, and that call must be obeyed. The secret of Mr. Anderson's success was explained by the word "prayer," and Mr. Seagram called upon friends at home to bear up the worker and his undertakings in their appeals to the throne of grace, and thus to have a share in the good which will be done.

Mr. W. H. Mills referred to communications he had received from young men in all parts of India, bearing grateful testimony to the services Mr. Anderson had rendered to them by his missions. He urged young men present to take deeper interest in foreign missions, and especially that to their Indian brothers.

Mr. J. H. Putterill, in a few words, spoke of Mr. Anderson's unremitting energy; and Mr. Henry Conder, recently returned from Bombay, referred to the many difficulties to be encountered by those who would preach the Gospel in India.

After kind and helpful words by Messrs. W. Wilde, J. Hayward, and Basil Hewer, there was a season of prayer.

Mr. Anderson, with much feeling, thanked those present for their encouraging words, also for their appreciation of the services he had been permitted to render. He was only too conscious of the little fruit which his labours had borne, but he trusted that fruit of his sowing would appear in due course. He asked the young men to bring their associations into line with this new departure of missionary enterprise. He earnestly appealed to secretaries to make a point of fixing definite seasons for prayer for foreign missions.

Sir George Williams feelingly wished Mr. Anderson God-speed on behalf of the members, and the very happy meeting concluded with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again."

Cairo.—Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Harris propose to leave Alexandria for Cairo at the end of this year. Cairo offers a larger and more needy sphere of work, its population being 600,000, and from there, as a centre, the towns and villages of both Upper and Lower Egypt can more easily be reached with the Gospel. The Mission also wishes to open at Cairo a boarding house on Christian lines, to be called "Berachah" or "Home of Rest," which, it is believed, will supply a real need as affording a centre of undenominational Christian work and testimony for God among the English speaking residents as well as for the benefit of the English and American visitors to Cairo during four or five months of the year. There seems a good prospect of the Home soon becoming self-supporting. About £250 will be required to start this Home. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Harris, at "The Central Soudan Mission," Alexandria.

Livingstone College.

The annual meeting in connection with Livingstone College was held on the 24th inst., at Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street. The Principal, Dr. Harford-Battersby, quoting the report, stated that six years of work at Livingstone College had demonstrated in an unmistakable manner the need of medical training for missionaries. At the commencement it was impossible to speak with any certainty as to the advantage of elementary instruction in medical and surgical subjects to those who might be obliged to labour far from qualified medical assistance. The result of several years' work by former students in every part of the world had left no room for doubt that the experience gained had been of inestimable value to the missionaries themselves, their fellow-workers, and the natives by whom they have been surrounded. Dr. Harford-Battersby went on to refer to a series of lectures which have been arranged for ladies, and went on to describe the medical mission work of the College, which is conducted in co-operation with Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield's home-mission efforts in the parish of St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green.

After alluding to the interesting quarterly journal of health and travel issued from the College, under the title of Climate and remarking upon its value to missionary workers, the speaker concluded a general survey of the work by bespeaking the support of his hearers for the forthcoming Livingstone Exhibition to be held at St. Martin's Town Hall on January 1-5, 1900.

Bishop Tugwell's words of encouragement were timely and forcible, and after Mr. Tissington Tatlow had spoken on behalf of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, Dr. F. W. Willway strongly advocated medical training for missionaries, emphasizing his case by a story of an Eskimo who, injured in the leg by a gun-shot, had to submit to amputation by such means as a hand-saw and a razor.

Prayer offered by Mr. D. Marshall Lang closed a very profitable gathering.

Something to Do.

Something to do for the Saviour I love,
Something to do for his kingdom above;
Something to do in obeying his call,
Something to do as the servant of all.

Something to do, tho' but little it be,
Something to do, my dear Saviour, for Thee;
Something to do with a sickle to wield,
Something to do in the great harvest field!

Something to do the afflicted to cheer,
Something to do in the cottages near;
Something to do for the poor and depraved,
Something to do for the millions enslaved.

Something to do for the victims of drink,
Something to do to induce them to think;
Something to do where no Bible is known,
Something to do in the use of my own.

Something to do for the toilers around,
Something to do where the children abound;
Something to do, with the wide world in view,
Something to do, though my talents be few.

Something to do, that all warfare may cease,
Something to do, the world's joy to increase;
Something to do, others' burdens to bear,
Something to do, others' sorrows to share.

Something to do, my affection to prove,
Something to do for the dear ones I love;
Something to do for the guidance of youth,
Something to do to establish the Truth!

Something to do to avoid every snare,
Something to do by importunate prayer;
Something to do to deliver my soul,
Something to do to press on to the goal.

Something to do as the seasons roll on,
Something to do ere life's chances are gone;
Something to do ere the darkness shall fall,
Something to do ere I hear the home call.

Something to do as a light in the world,
Something to do with Faith's banner unfurled;
Work there is plenty for hearts that are true,
Ev'rywhere, always, there's something to do!

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 3. Ezra iii.

THE first business of the returned exiles was to set the altar in its place. It was almost as though they realized that, to be right with God, and fully consecrated to Him, was the surest way to receive his omnipotent support. Whenever you begin some new work, the more specially if it is beset with difficulty, and hemmed in by opposition, be sure to see the altar upon its base, and to maintain it in the forefront of your life, offering the daily burnt-offering of a consecration life, as the duty of every day requires.

In the eighth verse, notice the alternative reading of the R.V. margin, "to set forward the work of the house of the Lord." It is a great matter when whole families devote themselves to promoting a common work for God! Nothing so binds together a household as for sons and brethren, fathers and children, to be inspired by a common object. This is especially noticeable in the ninth verse, where we are told the sons of Judah, as one, were pledged to this work. Unity in family and church life is absolutely necessary for success.

The foundation of the Temple was laid with much joy, the priests with their trumpets, the Levites with their cymbals, sang one to another, praising and giving thanks. Forgotten the tedious years of captivity! Forgotten the toils and hardships of their present position! Forgotten, too, the presence of the enemies who would certainly obstruct the work! Notwithstanding all, they could sing of the enduring goodness of God! There were tears, certainly, in the older eyes. Retrospect and comparison are saddening, prospect and hope gladdening. Forget the things behind, and reach forward to those before.

MONDAY, December 4. Ezra iv.

It was a clever ruse. At first sight it might be supposed that these men wished to honour God in co-operating with the builders of his temple; but when we are told that they who made the proposals were really the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin, it puts another complexion upon their apparent devotion. Evidently they desired to enter into this alliance that they might be able to sow dissension and discord amongst the builders, and ultimately either to bring their operations to nought, or to manœuvre themselves into the supreme places of direction and control. It becomes us, as Christian workers, to be extremely wary. The Gibeonites, who troubled Joshua, still approach us under specious disguise. When an alliance or confederacy is proposed, we should carefully test the character of those who make the offer. If they are worldly or ungodly, we should not be deterred by the fear of being accounted uncharitable by our telling them that they can have neither part nor lot in the matter. "Ye have nothing to do with us, to build an house unto our God."

The refusal brought trouble, jealousy, and a trying process of delay. But even this was better than a partnership in building, which must have yielded an insecure foundation for the subsequent fabric. It tested the builders and winnowed away the chaff from the wheat. See to it that your fellowship is with the Father, and the Son, and with those whom they can approve; and if you are called to exercise patience, remember that the patience and kingdom of Jesus Christ are close akin.

TUESDAY, December 5. Ezra v.

With these earlier verses we should read the prophecies of God's servants referred to. They prophesied in the name of the God of Israel, "which was upon them" (v. 1, R.V. marg.); and it is evident from the following verse that the prophets greatly helped Zerubbabel and Joshua. Their help would consist in their earnest exhortations and assurance that God would not forsake his people. It was especially necessary that the courage of the builders should be maintained during the long months of delay which must pass until the reply could arrive from Babylon.

The statement sent by the governor to the king was a very fair one. Evidently the Jews had not hesitated to tell the whole truth about themselves. They did not hesitate to admit that their fathers had provoked the God of heaven to wrath. Clearly the memory of the past lay heavily upon their souls, as an incentive to holy living. There is a sense in which we may forget the past, if it is a constant hindrance to strenuous endeavour in the present. But, on the other hand, we may well remember it as a cause of penitence, humility, of walking softly with our God, and of helping others to do better than we ourselves have done.

It may be that, in the case of some who read these words, grave matters are pending, concerning which they have written, and months may yet elapse before they get the decisive answer. There may be no sign or symptom how the matter is going, but let them possess their souls in patience and peace, knowing that tribulation is working experience, and experience hope that maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart.

WEDNESDAY, December 6. Ezra vi.

Cyrus was one of the greatest conquerors, and the noblest of the old world. He had evidently been greatly impressed by finding his name in the sacred books of the Jews, and Daniel's influence had probably been very conspicuous in advising him. It may even be that the hand of the great prophet drew up the decree which is here quoted. Let us remember the influence which attaches to high office, and where Christian men have the opportunity, let them avail themselves of it, for they cannot estimate how great service they may render to the cause of God at some critical moment. Public position is a priceless talent, when it is held by a conscientious and godly man.

The prayers that were being offered in Jerusalem for the Divine interposition, on behalf of the great enterprise the Jews had in hand, were abundantly answered. The king's heart, being in the Lord's hand, was turned like rivers of water, and the opposition to which the Jews had been subjected was overruled to secure not only a republication of the old decree but the addition of another, by virtue of which "expenses were given them with all diligence." Thus, the wrath of man praises God, and the remainder is restrained! When a man's ways please the Lord, He makes his enemies to be at peace with him. Thus, what happens to us, though it involves bonds and imprisonment, turns out for the furtherance of the Gospel.

The temple was dedicated with joy, the priestly service inaugurated, and the Passover kept with great gladness—not only because God had answered their prayer, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, but because they had separated themselves from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, and, with set purpose, were seeking the Lord. The priests and Levites had purified themselves as one, and all of them were pure (20). These are the conditions of blessedness still. Would that the twentieth verse were true of all of us!

THURSDAY, December 7. Ezra vii.

The lives of Ezra and Nehemiah were filled with the thought which comes out so often in these two books, of the good hand of God being upon his servants. It is a very favourite expression with them, as any concordance will prove. Let us live under the gentle, overshadowing touch of that hand. If we will only walk in God's way, and set our heart, as Ezra did, to seek and do God's will (10), we shall feel perpetually its mighty and blessed impulse.

We may learn something of Ezra's mode of speech by the references in the royal charter, which he bore with him. Evidently he had spoken a good deal of the law of his God, which was in his hand (14), of the altar of God's house (17), of his direct allegiance to the God of heaven, and of the necessity of careful obedience (23)—it would be a blessed result of our own walk with God, if we could impress on our associates and contemporaries the urgent importance of the service of God. Oh that God were such a living reality with us, that our life and conversation might make Him a living, moving force in the experience of others!

What a tender and appropriate ascription broke from the good priest's lips! He gave the praise where it belonged. Beyond the king, he saw God who had put such a thing into his royal heart. If he was regarded with favour, it was due to the extension of the Divine mercy. Even the strength with which he started on the long and perilous journey was the result of God's good hand. "Oh praise our God, ye people, and cause the voice of his praise to be heard!"

FRIDAY, December 8. Ezra viii.

What a memorable gathering was that, on the fringe of the green pastures which bordered on the Euphrates, preparatory to the plunge into the great inhospitable wilderness, which, infested with wandering tribes, lay between Ahava and the first outposts of the distant land of their fathers. The journey would consume between two and three months: and they were but a band of unarmed civilians, accompanied by women and children, and laden with treasures, the gift of the king and his nobles, as well as of their own people, for the temple. How exactly this resembles the march of God's Church through the world.

We, too, have left behind us the mighty Babylon of this world, with its wealth and power, and are travelling to the land of which we have heard, but not yet seen. We, too, may not ask for the usual protection which others depend upon, because we are so absolutely sure that God will beset us behind and before, and cover us with his protecting care. We, too, are bearing not the holy vessels of any earthly temple, but a sacred deposit which has been committed to our trust (1 Tim. i. 12). The doctrines of the Evangelical faith, the two ordinances, the sacred Scriptures, the Lord's Day, the honour and glory of Jesus Christ, our own bodies, which are compared to vessels—these are entrusted to us to carry through the world, until the last of the pilgrim host has entered the precincts of the heavenly temple, and handed back the trust which was once committed to his care.

In the meanwhile, let us heed Ezra's solemn adjuration, "Watch ye, and keep them." "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Do your hearts fail for fear, and your hands hang down? Be of good cheer; the hand of God is with you, and He will deliver you from the enemy and those that lie in wait.

SATURDAY, December 9. Ezra ix.

Ezra's emotion was very intense. With garment and mantle rent, with hair plucked out of head and beard, he sat on the ground like one in a maze, for probably several hours. The trespass of his people lay heavily on his soul. He acted as though it had been brought home to him as his own wrongdoing. Oh the guilt, oh the shame, of it!

What a prayer was this! How many memorable phrases occur in it! "I am ashamed and blush." "Our guiltiness has grown up unto the heavens." "A nail in God's holy place." "A little reviving in our bondage." "Our God hath punished us less than our iniquities deserve." "O Lord, the God of Israel, Thou art righteous." These are graphic and significant words, which deserve our pondering. We might well kneel with the page before us, and use them as the mould into which to pour the molten metal of our tears and cries.

But the main thought is the sinfulness of close union and fellowship, on the part of God's children, with those who have neither part nor lot with them in salvation. And, besides the sinfulness, there is the unwisdom of it. As is suggested in the twelfth verse, this fellowship with the ungodly is very weakening to our inner life, and our testimony among men. The single eye makes a strenuous and mighty life. The current is strong when the banks are narrow. Diffusion is weakness. It is only when we live separate and consecrated lives that we are really strong, and eat the good of the land.

Other Lands.

French Young Men:

REVIVAL AND CHEER.

THE prayers of readers of The Christian were recently asked on behalf of the Conference of French Young Men's Christian Associations in Bordeaux. The Conference is now over, and those who joined in prayer, and others besides, are now asked to join in thanksgiving for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, resulting in the conversion and strengthening of not a few young men.

The Conference, which is usually triennial, had been delayed for a year, so as not to clash with the International Y.M.C.A. Conference at Basle last year. The Bordeaux Y.M.C.A., which received the conference this time, has possessed, since the summer of last year, an active general secretary, M. Pourésy, formerly an official in the French Navy, who had for some time devoted his leisure to Y.M.C.A. work, and who threw up his post, sacrificing his right to a pension which he would have obtained by remaining two years longer in the navy, under strong conviction of a Divine call to give himself wholly to work amongst the young men of his native land. The Association was at a very low ebb when he came to it; but already there had been many signs of deepening spiritual life, preparing its members for the blessing that was to come to them through the conference.

About 150 delegates attended the conference, coming from all parts of France. The proceedings were throughout full of interest—the keynote being struck in a sermon by Professor Barde, of Geneva, preached in the great "temple" of the Chartrous on Sunday morning, from the words: "Follow thou me."

THE CROWNING BLESSING

was reserved for the early morning prayer meetings. That of Monday, Oct. 30, indicated much earnestness, under the leadership of M. Daumet, of St. Jean du Gard, in the Cevennes. Tuesday's meeting, conducted by M. Danton, of Le Vigar, also in the Cevennes, gave evidence of deepening blessing. Towards its close an anonymous note was read, suggesting that the next morning an opportunity should be afforded to those who, like the writer, had received a blessing at the conference, to bear testimony to the fact.

On Wednesday, November 1, in order to allow time to finish the business of the conference before starting for an excursion down the Garonne, it had been arranged to hold the prayer meeting at 7.30 instead of 8.30. The day being a public holiday in France, there was a large attendance, including some Bordeaux young men, who had been unable to be present previously. After several brief addresses and prayers, M. Danton, who again presided, asked for a time of silence, in order to give opportunity for testimonies and requests for prayer. Immediately one young man after another came forward—the first reading a brief statement of that which he felt unable to express extempore; another stating that the previous evening he had been led to decide for Christ; two humbly confessing that, whilst active in the work of their respective Associations, they had all the while been unconverted; yet another, that a false humility had kept him back from full surrender; and so on. The Holy Spirit was evidently working with much power.

A NUMBER OF YOUNG MEN

gave themselves up to the Lord's service. It was felt that routine must give way when God was thus dealing with souls; and so the prayer meeting was continued till 9.30, after which those who were still anxious and unsatisfied were invited into another room, while a brief sitting of the conference was held to wind up its business. Several found peace in this after-meeting, and in a final prayer meeting held on Thursday morning.

(1556)

Your readers will enter into the joy with which the older members of the Y.M.C.A.'s of France have witnessed the entry of a fresh contingent of younger brethren into the Master's service. I trust that many will join in prayer for these young converts, as they go forth into the temptations of French life, amongst their fellow-students, fellow-clerks, or fellow-peasants, as the case may be; and especially for those who have yet to go through the ordeal that awaits every young Christian Frenchman, the years of military service, during which he is cut off from association with those amongst whom his Christian life has hitherto been nurtured. Pray also that the example may prove contagious, as the news of God's working at Bordeaux is carried home by the delegates to their Associations scattered over France; and may prove for a work of grace amongst Protestant young men, and may, through them, become a means of blessing to the Roman Catholics who surround and vastly outnumber them.

I would specially ask prayer that this may be the case in Paris, where the Central Y.M.C.A. has a splendidly-equipped building, the gift of a wealthy American, and more than a thousand associate members. Twenty-five years ago, when I was a member of the Paris Y.M.C.A., we responded to the invitation that reached us through The Christian from the committee of Mr. Moody's mission, then going on in Glasgow, to observe a week of prayer for young men, which the International Y.M.C.A. Conference at Hamburg, the following year, adopted as an annual institution. The week of prayer in Paris, in 1874, ended with a remarkable revival in the Protestant Preparatory School of Theology at Batignolles, which it was my privilege to witness, and to chronicle in your columns. Will not Christian friends plead with us at the throne of grace for another blessing such as we had there in 1874, and as we have been again enjoying during the recent week in Bordeaux? Joseph G. Alexander.

Ex-Priests in France.

IN a recent note, Professor L. J. Bertrand, of L'Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, tells of a number of ex-priests who have recently taken charge of Protestant congregations, and otherwise entered upon evangelistic work. He gives particulars by name of seven men who have come out of Rome. In one case the ex-priest presides over a church composed entirely of people who were formerly Romanists; in another, the convert ministers to a congregation of deaf mutes.

"One man wants to become a schoolmaster, and three are teachers. Altogether, in 1899, we have assisted twenty-one ex-priests, monks, or seminarists, less than in 1898, because we are a little poorer. I say nothing of men whom we have helped to become photographers, journalists, booksellers, &c., because by publishing their names I might ruin their businesses.

"I have just now seven new ex-priests in for study, and they seem in every way worthy of sympathy. Six others have been refused."

Communications to M. Bertrand should be addressed: 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, France.

In a brief letter, Lord Radstock says: "Your readers are aware that a good many priests in France have left the Roman Church. It is believed by them that thousands more are shaken in their faith in Rome. An address to them has been signed by some seventeen ex-priests, testifying to their faith in the Gospel, and in our Lord. This is being sent to some 20,000 priests. A more important event has seldom happened.

"By God's grace, 20,000 priests, who are in the dark, will receive a clear statement of the truth in this address, which is the personal testimony of seventeen, who were, at one time, zealous for the Roman Church. I am sure your readers will pray earnestly that this testimony may bring light to thousands of priests, who sit in darkness, who, in their turn, may lead others to the light."

McAll Mission in France.

THE twenty-seventh Annual Report of the McAll Mission in France presents much interesting and encouraging matter. From all over France come reports telling the good news of souls brought to Christ and of work done in his name. Ajaccio, in Corsica, Marseilles, Nantes, and St. Etienne, with other places, all relate the same story, and as one reads one feels that the labour has not been in vain.

The work has many enemies, chief of which are perhaps the priests. They conspire against the light which shines even in the darkness. The following incident fitly illustrates this:—

God versus Priests.

The priests and sisters do their best to prevent the women coming. At the parish churches of St. Marguerite and the Quinze-vingts, meetings have been started for mothers, under the title of "La Sainte Famille." The members receive a chemise if they attend six times, but of course they are forbidden to come to us, and we have lost four or five on this account. Some have stood fast. Mrs. P. was ill, and visited by the parish priest, who seeing "L'Almanac de l'Ami de la Maison" on the wall, asked if she was one of those who went to the Conference; "for if you continue to go, you will have your name taken off the relief fund of the church and La Sainte Famille, and nothing more will you get from us." "Well," said Mrs. P., "I shall continue to go to the hall, for it is only there I get good, and if you won't give me anything, God will provide for me." And she has held fast, and has not been to church again. This I heard from a shopkeeper, who did not know I knew the people of whom he spoke.

An interesting feature of the work is the Mission boat, the Bon Messager. Sailing about from place to place on the Yonne, it has been the scene of much blessed work. Here is an instance of good: "The next halting place of the boat was Joigny, a small but important town of 6,200 inhabitants. Here also the meetings were excellent, and many people of all classes, including some of the highest functionaries, came frequently, including the professors and senior pupils of the large college—some of these afterwards walked over to Cézy, the next village, when the boat moored there, showing that they were really interested."

The report will amply repay perusal. Communications may be addressed to the office of the Mission, 36, Rue Godot de Mauroy, Paris. The deputation secretary for England is Colonel Finch White, 112, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Melbourne Training Home.

THE biennial report of the Melbourne Missionary Training Home for Women has an introduction from the pen of Mrs. Howard Taylor, whose visit to the Institution was especially welcome, renewing, as it did, a fellowship of many years previously.

Mrs. Taylor speaks of the importance of a thorough, practical training for those desirous of taking up work in the mission field; but particularly emphasizes the importance of preparatory training for lady missionaries. Posts are waiting to be filled; reliable, equipped, and tested workers are needed for the stations. Leaders, too, are wanted; workers, not necessarily of the highest education, but of spiritual power, of force of character—faithful, diligent, disciplined, under the control of the Holy Ghost.

The report declares that the spiritual blessings so necessary in the work of preparation have been graciously given. At the close of 1897 the Home supplied twelve female workers to the China Inland Mission, Bible Christian Mission, the Poona and Indian Village Mission, etc. In 1898 another band went forth from the Home, with the prayerful sympathy and encouragement of God's people. These vacancies were quickly supplied, and candidates who have means pay 10s. or 15s. weekly; but the majority are dependent upon the funds of the Institution. The expenses of the Home have been met, and the promoters record their heartfelt gratitude to God for many answers to prayer.

Miss Odgers is the Sister in charge of the Home, which is at 13 and 15, Gore Street, Fitzroy, Victoria, where communications should be addressed.

Bad Outlook in Armenia.

THE hopes which were formerly entertained as to the ingathering of this year's harvest in Armenia being effectual in relieving the suffering of those who have long been face to face with starvation, have, unfortunately, found no realization. The present situation is as grave as can be imagined, and the outlook is gloomy and serious, owing to the cruel exactions of the tax-collectors and the disastrous failure of crops.

Writing to the "Friends of Armenia," Dr. Raynolds, of Van, says: "The promise of the fields was excellent until well into June, and one more good rain would have insured such a crop as would have kept the people for two years at least. But this rain failed to come, and the fields, which depend on the rain alone, began to dry up, and many of them did not advance enough to pay for reaping. A friendly Government official assures me that the whole amount of food products in the province will not suffice for its inhabitants for more than eight or nine months. Our collectors inform us that not more than half—in many places not more than a quarter—of the Armenian villagers have sufficient food to last till another harvest. Of the other half, some have enough to last eight, six, or two months, and many even to-day have nothing."

Another missionary of thirty-one years' standing says:—"If marauders are not so rampant as in the past, taxation is most inexorable, and the condition of tithe-farmers pitiless in the extreme. Aside from this, the poor people, in their distress for food, clothing, and the wherewithal to meet the constant demand for taxes, &c., have in some cases so mortgaged their harvests, if not homes, in some of the provinces, that the heart-rending spectacle has been witnessed of the family standing by, weeping and wringing their hands, while creditors in their struggle sweep the threshing-floor—not leaving a spoonful for the hungry ones who have gathered it, though not enough to square the account. Added to this, I know of one poor woman who had her vegetables and only donkey taken besides, while she was beaten."

The secretary of the "Friends of Armenia" Society is Miss E. Cantlow; and the treasurer, Mr. Hector Munro Ferguson, who may be addressed, 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S.W.

The "Women's Armenian Relief Fund" records good work, in spite of adverse and trying circumstances. The American missionaries have found spinning, weaving, knitting, and other employment for women and children; and, in addition to organizing the industrial bureau, orphanages holding 500 boys and girls have been established in Van, where a thorough education is imparted and trades are taught.

The hon. secretary of this institution is Mrs. Mary Hickson, Danehurst, Putney, S.W., who will be pleased to give any further particulars.

Countess Schimmelmann.

IN connection with Countess Schimmelmann's letter to English friends, in a recent issue, I may mention that by a letter just received it appeared that she was on her way south, and expected to reach New York on the 20th inst.

Her funds are quite exhausted, and she stands in great need of some financial help. I am doing what I can, and shall be grateful for the co-operation of Christian friends of the Mission. Help can be rendered by paying to the account of Countess Schimmelmann at the bank of Messrs. Barclay and Co. Ltd., 54, Lombard Street, or by remitting to me, as hon. treasurer.

JOHN McCALL,

Copt Hill, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

The Thuringian Forest.

WRITING from the Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, in Thüringia, Herr E. F. Hoyer says:—"Some may think that in the heart of Germany, even in Luther's land, the blessed Gospel of Christ would have reached the people; but if the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would go with me up the mountains, or through the beautiful pine woods and lovely valleys, where thousands work in the large factories, their hearts would ache to see nearly ninety-eight per cent. of these people living without God, without Christ. I have lately been brought into contact with whole villages, with a population of over 1,000 people, who, for seven long years, have not heard a single word about the Gospel. For seven years no evangelist or colporteur has been into the Geierthal, except on the occasion of a wedding, when the Lutheran pastor came,—have never heard Christ preached as a personal Saviour. In one large village, nearly a mile long, containing over 1,000 work-people, the listeners stared in amazement as our colporteur read a chapter of Revelation, and said they had never heard that Jesus was coming again. I myself took several meetings, and could scarcely believe that I was in a Christian country.

"On one occasion we hired a large dancing-hall for a meeting, and the publican closed his bar during the time, saying that, as for seven years there had been no meeting of the kind in the village, he wished everyone to attend and listen. And how they listened! Everything is quite new to the people; they have not the remotest idea of the personality of Jesus, though they live in a so-called Christian country.

"What a splendid work could be done here! During dinner hours the people from the factories press round the colporteur, asking him to read to them from God's Word—so much do they long for something better in their lives. If we could only send a lady to work amongst the poor forgotten factory girls! One is allowed to visit and speak to them at all hours. A Gospel van would work wonders. 'Give this people bread,' says Jesus. But how? Who will help us to spread the Gospel in Luther's land?"

Movement in Helsingfors.

WRITING from Helsingfors (3, Brunsparken), Mr. Michael A. Scherbinin says:—"For a full year prayer has been ascending to God that someone would come to work among the English-speaking residents of this town; and now we ask that others will join in invoking blessing upon work begun by Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of St. Petersburg.

"I believe the Lord intends to awaken religious zeal and life among the little body of English-speaking people of Helsingfors. I am sure it is the wish of Mr. Kilburn to respond to God's will, and should he be called by the Lord to engage in Christian work here, he will be glad to obey, and, if need be, settle here at work. I shall be glad to correspond with any who are prompted to sympathize with us in our work."

Cherbourg.—Pastor Boisson is endeavouring to organize a work among the soldiers and sailors of this port by opening a reading-room. At present it is confined to the chapel vestry on Sunday afternoons, but the appreciation with which it has met has induced him to initiate measures of extension. M. Boisson has also begun two Sunday-schools and a mission service. The work lies in a great measure among Romanists, and little or no help is forthcoming. Communications may be addressed to the Pastor, at 17, Rue Louis Philippe, Cherbourg, Manche, France.

Off to Argentina.

WRITING from Geelong, Victoria, while en route for the Argentine Branch of the "Regions Beyond" Mission Union, Mr. Robert Elder gives interesting particulars of his journeyings. At Hobart he was welcomed by Rev. J. Blaikie, the Baptist minister, and an encouraging week's mission was held. From Hobart he made for Launceston, staying with Rev. J. T. Piercey, where, on one Sunday morning, a congregation of 1,100 people faced him.

Proceeding to Melbourne, about a fortnight's stirring gatherings were held, and much interest roused. While here, there was a farewell to Mr. C. F. Reeve and

A PARTY OF OUTGOING MISSIONARIES.

As is well known, Mr. Reeve is the founder of the Poona and Indian Village Mission, which, though only begun in 1893, bids fair to become a power for good in our great Eastern Dependency. One remarkable feature of this Mission is that most of its workers are colonials—it is really a "New Australasia" in India. At this meeting Mr. Reeve told how, in answer to prayer, God had sent a printer, builders, a chemist, nurses, a dentist, and practical farmers to work with the Mission. Amongst the outgoing party was Mrs. Cutts, formerly matron of the Melbourne Hospital.

Mr. Elder continues:—"The whole party comprised two from New South Wales, five from Victoria, five from South Australia, one from West Australia, and seventeen from New Zealand. Britain's most beautiful and fertile colony seems a wonderful missionary-producing place. During the last four years, including three now in training, no fewer than fifty have gone from New Zealand under the auspices of this Mission alone. Remembering that its population is only 750,000, about equal to that of Liverpool, it reveals deep missionary interest. Fourteen of this seventeen were, said Mr. Reeve, 'the cream of New Zealand.' It is said that people are thinking of getting up a petition to the Government asking them to put a stop to this exodus of New Zealand's BEST MEN AND WOMEN.

Would that the Mother Country would follow in the footsteps of her daughter! What has caused such a glorious effect as this? Inquiry elicits the information that a great number of the party were influenced, directly or indirectly, by the Mission tour of Rev. George Grubb and party some years ago. The effects of that tour are permanent and far-reaching.

"Amongst the New Zealand contingent is Mr. J. H. Lowe, his wife, and daughter. Mr. Lowe has been for some years engineer-in-chief on the New Zealand Railways, and has relinquished that important post to spend the remaining days of his life for India's salvation. It is commonly reported that he was offered £1,000 a year above his former salary to stay. His consecration has made a DEEP IMPRESSION ON NEW ZEALAND."

Another remarkable feature of this farewell meeting was that, though no appeal was made, £400 was sent in the same night, and next morning a cable was received from Poona, saying that £200 was needed during the next few days. Mr. Reeve was perplexed, as he really needed the money for the outgoing party. However, he felt that God had time enough to send more, so he at once cabled the needed sum away. Twenty minutes later, it is said, he received letters containing about £500. Be rebuked, O miserable unbelief! "The question that comes to me," says Mr. Elder, "is, Cannot God do likewise for South America?"

A Map of China, giving valuable statistical and other information, has been issued from the office of the China Inland Mission, Newington Green, Mildmay. (14s.) The map is much more than a reprint on an enlarged scale of Bretschneider's excellent map, several hundred corrections having been made. Native geographical terms are explained, and the cities and towns distinguished according to their size and political character. The map is remarkably plain; and being untearable and folded into a substantial case, it will be comparatively easy to consult. It is precisely the map for which we have long been waiting.

Soldiers' Christian Association.

THE annual convention of the Soldiers' Christian Association, recently held at Exeter Hall, necessarily suffered slightly in point of attendances, on account of the absence of so many troops in South Africa; but the occasion was, nevertheless, one of interest and enthusiasm.

The meetings were numerous, and varied in character. At midday Col. J. PHILIPS presided at the first gathering, extending a cordial welcome to the delegates. The luncheon, at which Lord KINNAIRD and other friends spoke, was followed by an afternoon gathering, notable for an addresss on 1 Cor. xvi. 13, by Lieut.-Gen. H. A. BROWNLOW, and for some interesting accounts of work in India. The next fixture was a Bible reading; after which came the evening meeting, which afforded a striking illustration of the welcome combination of and simple homeliness which have rightly and happily come to be associated with meetings in which members of the services predominate.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, president of the Association, who occupied the chair, referred in kindly terms to the intimate connection between the Y.M.C.A. and the Soldiers' Christian Association, and went on to give a pithy sermonette on the word "friend." He described in happy style the various friendships which the world considers most desirable, and went on to recount a few of the chief attributes of the "best Friend of all."

Captain F. L. TOTTENHAM told of an Irish corporal who, sent to fetch a couple of files of men from a particular company, observed, "Mesilf an' thim two files o' men, attinshun!" So, the speaker remarked, in urging his hearers to be out and out Christians in the Army, he called himself, also, to "attention." Dwelling on the words in Luke xxiv. 4-6, "Ye are my witnesses," and referring to Acts i. 8, Captain Tottenham pointed out some of the duties and characteristics of a witness of Christ, one who not only has seen, but is seen, who goes forth with peace and joy in his heart to testify of the Master.

Mr. L. H. NOTT read an interesting letter, which described in vivid words the Christian influence of the Association; and went on to emphasize the importance of the missionary work which a converted soldier may carry on amongst his comrades.

Next came a forcible utterance from Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL, who rejoiced in the vigorous efforts put forth by the Association in connection with the war in South Africa. In each of a capacious tent is to be erected, where the soldiers may write their letters and find quiet recreation. Gospel meetings will be held nightly, to which, it is confidently hoped, members will rally. Gatherings held under such circumstances may well attract those who would ordinarily pay little or no regard to Gospel effort. The tents will be under the personal direction of Mr. A. H. Wheeler and other workers. The military authorities have expressed themselves as approving of the Association's action in the matter, and, should the war be prolonged, further supplies of tents and more workers are to be despatched.

Stimulating words of spiritual experience were added by Capt. J. R. WIGAN, and the meeting was subsequently addressed by a number of non-commissioned officers, who were called up to the platform by the chairman. Sergt.-Major GRAHAM, R.H.A., Col.-Sergt. PEARCE, of the Gloucester Regiment, and other friends, spoke with a vigour and unconventionality which proved highly refreshing. The former, in a word of evangelistic exhortation, recalled an incident in connection with one of Mr. D. L. Moody's meetings in London. The evangelist, illustrating the simplicity of the act of accepting Christ, had offered his Bible to a soldier sitting in the front row of seats. Probably to Mr. Moody's surprise the soldier sprang forward, took the Bible, and subsequently became converted. This was brother Graham; and now, so many years afterwards, he produced the Bible before his Exeter Hall audience, and used it, as Mr. Moody did, to impress sinners with a sense of God's grace and willingness to aid and save the repentant.

A crisp dialogue between Sir George Williams and Col.-Sergt. Pearce brought out some helpful points as to the possibilities for Christian service and social and spiritual progress in the ranks, and a few kindly sentences from Mr. A. H. WHEELER concluded a helpful and satisfactory gathering. On Saturday last Mr. Wheeler, with a number of other workers, sailed for the Cape.

Tamil Children of Ceylon.—It is proposed to give to the 1,500 Tamil children in the village day and Sunday schools at Jaffna, Ceylon, a Tamil Bible or Testament on New Year's Day, 1900. The missionaries want to see the sacred Scriptures in the heathen homes of the people; and, if a prayer accompanies the gift of each Bible, a special blessing must come to the homes, the villages, the schools, and the children of this part of Ceylon. "A little child shall lead them;" and if we lead the children to the children's Saviour through the knowledge of the Word of Life, they, in their turn, shall "lead" others to the Lord. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. C. E. H. Trimmer, Mission House, Jaffna, Ceylon.

"After Many Days."

AT the close of a class of some 300 persons met for Bible study in the city of Pittsburg, Pa., some twenty years ago, a visitor to the city was introduced to the teacher of the class as "Mr. Jones, of Philadelphia."

The teacher asked Mr. Jones if he ever lived in New York, or, more particularly, in Brooklyn. Being answered in the affirmative, he further inquired if he did not teach a class of boys in a certain church some twenty-five years previously.

Mr. Jones, having answered this question also in the affirmative, was further asked: "Do you remember about that time (1854) taking one of your boys home to tea with you one Sunday, because he was to leave for another city; and, after prayer with him, giving him a little book "A Threefold Cord?"

"I cannot say that I do call the case to mind, but it was the kind of thing I used often to do."

"Well," said the other, "I remember it well, for I was that boy; and only two weeks ago I said to my wife, 'There's the little book my teacher gave me so many years ago. I wonder where he is, or if I shall ever see him again!' And here you are."

A great joy filled both hearts, and the old teacher was glad that he had sat at the feet of his old scholar that day in Pittsburg. There was also much to tell of school and college life, and of years of service as a missionary in India, and a hope some day to return.

In THE CHRISTIAN for September 28, just to hand, the sketch and portrait of the Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D.D., appears, the sight of which has led the writer to tell the foregoing true story, for Dr. Kellogg was none other than the boy referred to above. He has gone to his reward; but his old teacher, Mr. Edward A. Jones, still lives and labours for the Master he loves. He is now in his seventy-sixth year, was the only man the writer knew when he came to New York in 1881, and is still an officer of the Society which he then helped to found; i.e., the International Medical Missionary Society. He was born in Wales, and in early life resided in London, and was one of the early members of the Y.M.C.A. founded by Sir George Williams.

A personal friend of George Müller, he was used in bringing him to this country. He was also one of the first men to join the Fulton Street prayer meeting in 1857. It has, indeed, been a great pleasure and privilege to enjoy, as the writer has done, the close friendship and co-operation of such a man for the past twenty years.

GEORGE D. DOWKONTT.

New York, October 9.

Educating the Deaf and Dumb.—The Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb has recently acquired the freehold of the premises of the Training College and Practising School at Fitzroy Square, W., which have been put in thorough repair; a reading-room, properly fitted up and arranged for the use of the students, has been provided, and a circulating library established for the elder pupils attending the Normal School. The annual report of the Association testifies to the successful efforts which have been made in the general and technical instruction of the afflicted. Her Majesty's inspectors, however, point out the necessity of additions to several departments, and the outlay for these improvements is estimated at from £800 to £1,000. The secretary is Mr. William Van Praagh, 11, Fitzroy Square, London, W.

Home Missions.

The Manchester Mission.

THE thirteenth anniversary of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission was celebrated with much enthusiasm last week. Tuesday was the day, and at noon, in the Central Hall, Dr. Clifford delivered an eloquent and powerful sermon to a crowded assemblage, basing his discourse on the words, "Whom say ye that I am?" In the afternoon there was a gathering in the Free Trade Hall. Mrs. W. Tattersall, of Bowdon, presided, and urged the claims of the Mission.

Sister Bertha gave an account of evangelistic effort at Ancoats, where hundreds of men and women, weary and despairing through sin, had been pointed and led to the Saviour of the world. Sister Pattie spoke of "rescue, relief, and prevention" among women and girls. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse followed, warmly commending the efforts of the Sisters. The public meeting in the evening was presided over by Mr. Charles Heap, and the hall was crowded.

THIRTY THOUSAND PEOPLE come weekly under the influence of the Mission, with its thousand and more voluntary workers, mostly gathered from the scenes of sorrow and misery with which it deals.

Rev. S. F. Collier, superintendent, presented a brief report of the movements of the Mission, which had cost practically £10,000 a year. Of this sum £6,500 had been spent on evangelistic work, and the remaining £3,500 represents the outlay on the social side. Five-sixths of the £6,500 and two-thirds of the £3,500 had been raised within. That is, the Mission had provided ninepence in the shilling, and then appealed to the public for the remaining threepence. He understood they had property of the value of £200,000, and for the keep of this property, and the maintenance of thirty-two workers, about £2,500 a year was asked. The Central Hall is open night and morning, and is practically a religious exchange. It is a House of Mercy, and right in the very heart of the city. He asked those who were going to live some distance away not to forget altogether the city they were leaving, and in which they had made their money. John Wesley once said that the only fault he found with the Oldham Street Church was that it was too much in the country. Those who were going outside were asked to remember that last year 60,000 beds were furnished for the destitute; 146,730 meals were given; employment was found for many; they had 2,500 children in the Sunday-school; and at Bridgewater Hall they had a MAGNIFICENT RAGGED SCHOOL.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald spoke of the progress and development of the Mission, describing it as a multitude of agencies moving together on a smooth and harmonious footing, as befitted work in a great business centre. He paid a tribute to those who had obeyed the call to take up arms; and pleaded that the principle should extend over a wider area, and be applied to higher warfare.

Dr. Clifford gave an interesting address. Life was so full of pessimisms, and they were so often with us, that it was cheering to come into contact with people of invincible optimism. Such were the people who supported the Mission. Methodism had, in recent years, given the country two great benefits—the inauguration of the Twentieth Century Fund, and the solving, by such missions as this, the urgent and pressing problems presented by great masses of the people gathered together in the centres of our large towns.

Rev. F. L. Wiseman (Birmingham) also addressed the meeting; and, at the close, it was announced that, with subscriptions and collections, the appeal for £2,000 had been responded to to the extent of £2,165. The anniversary was a success not only from a financial standpoint, but also in point of the blessing and inspiration.

Ragged School Union.

THE annual report of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society is a record of quiet work among the poor of London, especially the children and cripples. In this great city thousands are living lives of practical heathenism, never entering a place of worship, never thinking of the necessity of training their children in the fear and love of God, never thinking of anything higher than the dull round of monotonous toil, varied with evenings spent at the public-house. It is among such that the Society labours, sending among them, as visitors and helpers, men and women, whose hearts have been reached with the love of God, and who feel for the woes of their fellows.

During the year, the Society has multiplied its "cripple parlours," in which recreation and educational gatherings are arranged for the little sufferers who can hobble on crutches, or who can be wheeled or carried to the mission. These gatherings bring the little people out of their sad surroundings, and infuse brightness and joy into their painful lives. Visitors to these "parlours" are always welcome. There are over 5,000 cripple children upon the registers.

The means adopted by the Society for the benefit of the children are—personal effort, visits from house to house, writing letters to the sick at home or in hospitals, secular and religious instruction in classes, schools, meetings, and sending a kindergarten teacher to instruct them in their homes;—a wonderful boon to those children whose lives would otherwise be passed in loneliness, and in some cases in uncared-for and unrelieved suffering.

Of the 43,000 children attending the Society's Sunday schools, 230 have become communicants during the past year, while the Shoeblack Brigade has a membership of 308 boys, whose earnings amounted to £7,390 10s. 4d. The Barefoot Mission has supplied 51,000 garments and 3,000 pairs of boots and shoes, besides toys and more substantial help. The office of the Union is 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, Mr. John Kirk being secretary.

A Great Midland Mission.

THE twelfth anniversary gatherings of the Birmingham Wesleyan Methodist Mission—better known simply as the Central Mission—were held on Monday last week, when another year's successful work was recorded. The revival which stirred many of the neighbouring circuits in the early autumn of 1898, and which was equally conspicuous in the Mission centres, has been followed by a year of great spiritual blessing. Rev. F. L. Wiseman, B.A., continues in the post of superintendent of the work, and evinces great personal interest in its numerous religious and social undertakings. On Sunday nights throughout the year the halls and chapels of the Mission have been filled to overflowing, conversions have been regularly witnessed in each of these places, and hundreds of inquirers have been personally dealt with. There has been an all-round increase in the attendance at the Sunday morning services, and other meetings.

In no single department is there any decline to be reported, either in effort or in prosperity. All the ordinary work of the circuit, among young and old, has been diligently prosecuted, and, as heretofore, every possible effort made—by services in the slums and lodging-houses, by open-air meetings, and by house-to-house visitation—to reach the congested masses and the irreligious poor. The value and influence of the work has even been recognised in official circles, the police asserting that the character of the neighbourhoods, in which the operations of the Mission are carried on, has changed greatly for the better. The Mission workers are cheered and encouraged as they see so many of their members witnessing a good confession in the face of constant and aggravating persecution. Out of most restricted means, they contribute liberally and cheerfully to the needed funds; and, after long hours of arduous, and often obnoxious, work, they gladly give their remaining strength to the service of the Mission. Their testimonies, "not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth," reveal the closeness of their fellowship with Christ, while their in prayer prove the intensity of their love for man. Many of the promises made to the Twentieth Century Fund are by those who were once penniless drunkards, and represent an amount of self-sacrifice which, to the uninitiated, is almost incredible.

The social work continues to grow in importance, and the devotion of the lay agents and the Sisters to their duties is beyond all praise. Some idea of the extent of the operations of the Mission may be gained, when it is understood that persons are included in the Sunday evening congregations, and that there are 1,900 who meet in classes for Christian fellowship. The voluntary workers number 500; there are 2,500 Sunday scholars; 500 children attend services for the young; while 1,000 are enrolled in the bands of hope. The average weekly attendance at the Gospel temperance meetings is 1,300; the mothers' meetings have a membership of 450; while there are 400 young women in the girls' evening homes. Twenty lodging-house and cottage services are held every week; 795 visits were paid to sick patients by the nurse during the year; 280 men have been employed at the labour yard; permanent employment has been found for upwards of 90 men and women: and 1,725, who were out of employment or in other trouble, have been personally dealt with at the offices of the Mission. The social work is entirely unsectarian; persons are helped after investigation, regardless of creed; but, at the same time, they are lovingly pointed to the Saviour of men.

The headquarters of the Mission are at the Central Hall in Corporation Street; but this building will in process of time be vacated, a site having been secured in the same thoroughfare for the erection of premises more in accord with the of the work. The Sunday evening services at the hall are often so crowded that overflow meetings are necessary. Other features of the work at headquarters are well attended, class and prayer meetings, men's morning school, mothers' meetings, Gospel temperance concerts, girls' and youths' clubs, Sunday-schools, bands of hope, cottage services, lodging-house meetings, district visitation, open-air preaching, and vigorous button-holing in the streets. These testify, with no uncertain voice, to a church both militant and triumphant. Conversions are regularly seen at the services. Not seldom a first visit to the hall results in a first or a fresh vision of the Cross. At other times a person goes away under deep conviction, only to return the next Sabbath with the express determination of deciding for Christ. Many are brought in through the influence of the girls' club. Special attention is devoted to young men who are in lodgings, or who are exposed to the often even greater temptations of business houses. A painful history and a heavy heart are sometimes found behind an outwardly respectable exterior.

SOME EXAMPLES.

On one occasion, amongst others who found Christ, were four young men. One of these was personally spoken to in the prayer meeting, and invited to the inquirers' room. Another of his own accord walked out in front of the congregation to the vestry; while a third, kneeling on the floor of the hall, broke forth in praise to God that he had found peace during the service, and implored blessing upon his wife and home. After all the other inquirers had left, a young man was noticed sitting in the dark in a corner of the hall. He seemed too dazed with a sense of sin to ask the way to the inquiry-room, but a few minutes later he was praising God for deliverance, and beseeching grace for the future.

The Central Hall may be regarded as a model church. Its spiritual tone is decidedly healthy, and it would be hard to imagine a society more lovingly united. The fire of the Holy Ghost fuses all hearts into one. There is hearty co-operation in work, sincere sympathy in a brother's or sister's sorrow, and friction and faction are unknown. The testimonies of the members are ever fresh arguments in support of scriptural evangelical Christianity. It is an inspiration to attend the Saturday meeting for prayer and praise. The gathering is always remarkable, and the testimonies given through the whole company. Evidence is forthcoming of what workers and members have been doing during the week. Maybe a conversion has taken place in the home; some dying person, perhaps advanced in years, has found Christ; or some pithy saying has put a host of pettifogging, persecuting Philistines to flight.

Lack of space forbids more than a passing reference to the work of the various other agencies in operation. The young men's "at home" is prospering, with an average attendance of forty or fifty; in the house-to-house visitation, which is zealously carried on, the visitors are invariably well received, and it is made clear that the people are not hostile to religion. Work among the children is sedulously fostered, and from them, and from the young people, there is a steady ingathering into the church. The children know full well that their salvation is desired, and many of them have intelligently made choice of Christ.

Brief reference must be made to the Sunday evening services, conducted at the Midland Institute by Rev. F. L. Wiseman, who regularly gazes upon a sea of upturned faces, which must in itself be an inspiration. The congregation is gathered from all sides of the city and all classes of the community. Young manhood and womanhood are well represented; but, perhaps, even more striking is the number of men and women in middle life and advancing age. As to results, it may be said the inquiry-room is needed nearly every Sunday night, while many have come to decision during the services.

Equally successful is the work carried on at the various branches—Bradford Street and Newton Row; but it is necessary to pass on to

THE SOCIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Sea Horse Hall, situated in one of the worst neighbourhoods, is still a centre of energetic life. In addition to the usual public services, the engagements include a Pleasant Sunday Afternoon for men, Sunday-school, band of hope, girls' club, young women's sewing guild, and mothers' meeting; while there is also a labour yard, labour bureau, and coffee tavern connected with this centre. There is an excellent brass band, nearly every member of which was once the very opposite of a God-fearing man. One member formerly never went to bed without a bottle of beer by his side!

"Havergal House" is an evening home for factory girls, and "Shaftesbury House" is carried on as a factory girls' boarding-home, while other branches of social work include the Homes Mission and the Central Girls' Club.

At the anniversary meetings interesting personal testimonies were given, and the claims of the Mission were eloquently pressed upon large audiences. The large amount of £700 was needed to meet the deficiency of the ordinary income, and the hearts of Mr. Wiseman and his coadjutors were rejoiced by the liberal collections exceeding that sum.

Homes for Aged Poor.

SINCE 1869, when the first Home for the Aged Poor was opened, a large amount of relief and comfort has been given to a vast number of aged ones by the grant of a room rent free. The thirtieth anniversary of the charity has been marked by the gift of a house, to be used as an additional home. Twelve persons occupy its nine rooms. The total number of homes is now fifteen, with 181 inmates.

All inmates must have a few shillings weekly from some source. Often the savings of years of toil provide this income, while in some cases children, old employers, or charitable societies supply the necessary funds. In order to ensure comfort to our old friends during the winter, it has been found necessary to give them coal, their own means being quite inadequate to provide sufficient firing. Special help for this object is asked for. Many would enjoy the cheer of their own fire more if they felt that an aged pilgrim was supplied by their liberality.

We also need help for our sick and nursing funds. Among a large number of the very old, sickness is a frequent visitor, and in many cases there is no surviving relative to help in the hour of need. A large proportion of the inmates of the Homes belong to "the household of faith," and to these it is a double privilege to minister. For the others, we hope that the comfort and rest of the earthly home may induce them to seek a heavenly one. Much is done among them by visitors, Bible readers, and the circulation of suitable literature. Further particulars, and a report, will be sent on application to the Misses Harrison, 5, Grandacre Terrace, Anerley, S.E.

CLARA E. HARRISON.

The Theatrical Mission.

THE work amongst theatrical employés, which has so long been conducted in connection with the well-known institute at Macready House, Covent Garden, has of late shown encouraging signs of spiritual revival.

To conduct such a mission on evangelistic lines, and yet in such a way as to retain the attendance and confidence of theatrical people, would appear to be no easy task; but the committee have met with much success. The work is of a varied character, including social and philanthropic departments. Some hundreds of girls and young women, who have been brought under Christian teaching and influence, are regularly written to, month by month, by Christian ladies. Many a girl has been won for Christ through these written messages, and numbers restored to friends, while yet others have been helped to more congenial employment when they wearied of the tinsel which they mistook for gold.

Not a few whose health had given way have been visited in their time of sickness, and their last hours soothed with loving attention and Christian service. Again and again, too, the Mission has been able to rescue and restore to their homes girls who have been stranded in continental cities as a result of treachery. Weekly teas to gatherings of minor actresses and dancers, followed in every instance by an earnest Gospel address, are interesting features; while copies of the Psalms and New Testament are freely distributed, and Bibles placed in the rooms of the many lodging-houses frequented by theatrical companies on tour in the provinces.

As a rule, from twenty-five to thirty girls are staying at Macready House, some engaged in the various theatres, others seeking fresh engagements, others just back from tour, some sick and weary of the profession, ready to accept any other honourable employment. For these a simple service is held every morning, in which they manifest a reverent interest. By personal kindness and sympathy, confidence is secured, and the workers are enabled to guide many into the paths of righteousness.

The institute affords a bright and cheerful home. It is conducted on Evangelical and undenominational lines, and the principles of temperance are strictly observed. An effort is being made to clear away a debt which hampers the work. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. S. E. Burrow, Macready House, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Dartford Young Men's Institute.

A GOOD work proceeds in the Martyrs' Memorial Hall, with its associated Young Men's Protestant Institute and Blackwood Institute. There is a Bible reading union, with a membership of ninety-five; a Christian workers' band, which arranges for special services, district visiting, tract distribution, &c.; also a literary and debating society. Meetings are held, and lectures delivered, bearing upon subjects highly interesting and instructive.

The Blackwood Institute was erected in memory of Sir Arthur Blackwood. It is the headquarters of the Lads' Bible Class, which meets every Sunday afternoon. The Institute is open three evenings a week, but the promoters are requiring more helpers in their efforts to reach and reclaim the lads who roam about the streets. There are also juvenile Protestant missions, Sunday school; and the Band of Hope has proved, with God's blessing, a great help to the cause of temperance. Marked progress continues to be made, and these institutions are evidently impressing for good the lives of those brought under their influence. The secretary, Mr. F. Harle, may be addressed at the Institute.

North London.—The annual report of the North London Gospel Samaritan Mission contains pithy accounts of much good work. The evangelistic services have proved fruitful, and the Mission sister has been enabled to give spiritual and temporal aid to the sick poor. Many and varied efforts are put forth in order to reach the masses with the Gospel. The pastor is an honorary worker. Gifts of clothing and tracts are asked for. Address Mr. J. J. Vyvyan, hon. sec., 6, Montpelier Road, Upper Holloway, N.

West London Sisters.

THE Sisterhood of the West London Mission was founded twelve years ago, when the Mission was started by Rev. H. Price Hughes. The idea was entirely due to Mrs. Hughes, and was then so novel as to encounter considerable opposition. Again and again Mrs. Hughes was told that she would never induce ladies to leave comfortable homes for work in the slums, and that it was not safe or wise for them to do so. "I thought I knew my sisters better than that," she said, and the event has proved her to be entirely right. Not only have applications to join the Sisterhood come in great numbers, and from all quarters and from all churches, but other similar organizations have sprung up, in which not only the methods, but even the very uniform has been copied again and again.

The guiding principles of the West London Sisterhood have secured it not only numbers, but efficient workers. One of these principles is that, as far as possible, the Sisters shall be free to do their work in their own way. Mrs. Hughes retains the oversight of all the Sisterhood, and has the fullest sympathy for every member of it; and yet she sees that everyone has sufficient freedom to work out her own ideals and her own plans. This is a very great advantage to every worker, and it has, in practice, yielded some most interesting developments.

Beginning with district work as a foundation, a Sister gets interested in a special class of people, and desires to benefit them. She is allowed to follow her bent, and in this way have sprung up a number of both evangelistic and social. Thus we have our crèche or day nursery for babies, our children's work, including children's services, children's temperance work, and play-hour. We also have clubs for boys and girls, and, ascending the scale of life, we have various meetings for men and women—men's meetings, a poor man's lawyer, mothers' meetings, peoples' drawing rooms, thrift clubs, a class for policemen, a guild for cripples and blind, concerts, and temperance meetings, counter attractions to the public-house—in addition to all the ordinary services of a large Mission Church. And, lastly, there is a Home for the Dying. The respectable poor, turned away from the hospitals as incurable, need—pathetic fact—a place in which to die. Life in London is so crowded, and the distress to an invalid in the one room, with all the members of the family living and sleeping in it, can be imagined. Here, then, there is a quiet, peaceful Home as a last refuge, free to all applicants, the greatest need forming the greatest claim.

Another aim of the Sisterhood is to keep in touch, as far as possible, with all forms of Christian work. I have already intimated that it is recruited from all branches of the Christian Church—Church of England, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist—and probably no organization combines to so great a degree the evangelistic and social forms of work.

Two of our Sisters are Poor Law Guardians, and in both cases they were returned at the head of the poll by overwhelming majorities. Their association with the workhouses gives them the power of doing most valuable work, both as Sisters and as Guardians. It is a wonderfully good combination, and fruitful in its results. Only the other day a poor woman applied for out-relief. She was destitute and lonely. One of the Guardian Sisters interested herself in the case, helped her, invited her to our services, and found kind friends, and came to Christ, having been led to Him by the compassion and kindness of one of his followers.

The other Guardian instituted teas at our halls for the old men and women on their "day out," having pitied them when she saw how homeless they were on such occasions, with no refuge but the public-house. We have had such Workhouse Teas, and a simple social entertainment now for several years; and the result is that the drunkenness, formerly almost universal, has greatly decreased, and the inmates return home sober at the end of the day. And here, again, kindness and compassion have had their fruit in altered lives, and in a real spiritual change.

Besides the workhouse, our Sisters are interested in other forms of social relief, and several are on the committees of the Charity Organization Society. In every way we try to bridge the gulf that often lies between the poor and destitute and the charities that exist for their aid.

We have four Sisters who have been trained as hospital nurses, and devote all their time to nursing the sick in their own homes. No one unfamiliar with the conditions of life in these districts can appreciate the immense benefits conferred by these Sisters' visits, or the influence they exert. The knowledge they themselves acquire of the way in which the people live is of material use.

Two Sisters have felt themselves specially called to rescue work, and are often to be seen in Piccadilly during

THE LONG NIGHT HOURS.

Their work has peculiar difficulties, and we have much rejoiced in the success that has, of late, been very marked. We have a Shelter in connection with this part of the work, where girls are received and cared for by the Sisters, and sent thence to suitable employment. Our last venture in this department is a work-room where girls are taught dressmaking.

Our Mission enterprises fall naturally into two divisions, social and evangelistic; but we have no hard and fast lines—they must go together; and surely no one can truly represent the Lord Jesus Christ who does not minister to the temporal and bodily needs of men. Our social work is again and again the greatest possible auxiliary to the spiritual.

To the evangelistic side of the Mission we give, of course, the first place, and our greatest care; and, in concluding this brief and all unworthy sketch, I should like to dwell a little more in detail upon this. Few can measure the difficulties to be encountered in seeking the conversion of the people. Mainly they are three—Drink, Immorality, and Over-crowding. Any one of these three might be a text for a long sermon. It is very hard to induce people, living in these back slums, to come to our services. We only get them by degrees, by persistent kindness, and by just keeping at them. And, therefore, so much of our time and strength goes in this effort to gain the individual. Some poor drunkard, some sad sinner, is laid on a Sister's heart; and she goes after this lost one week after week, month after month. The sickening disappointments are past telling; and it does, indeed, need faith in God to keep us from being overwhelmed. But this faith does save us, and we rejoice, with a joy past telling, to see men and women won for Christ in these

HAUNTS OF SIN AND VICE.

Such a case is very present to my mind now. Months ago a woman attended one of our mission services, and her whole heart was stirred, and she gave herself unreservedly to Christ. In her case this involved a hard struggle with sin; but, happily, she has been victorious. She is a widow, and very delicate, and her means of earning a livelihood are very scanty. We have had to help her all we can, though it has not been easy. We have been able at last to place her in a position where she has a prospect of maintaining herself and her little girl.

But I must close. May I add that our Sisterhood is greatly in need of funds at the present time, and that contributions will be gratefully received? SISTER ELIZABETH.

Women Inebriates.—Under the management of the Church of England Temperance Society, a Home for the reception of women who have fallen into habits of intemperance is maintained at Ellison Lodge, Herne Hill. Full particulars may be obtained from the hon. sec., Miss Forsyth, 101, Sloane Street, London, S.W.

A Paradise for Boys.

"YOU should go to a Home," said a kind-hearted military man on Tower Hill, speaking to a street arab of whom he had bought a newspaper.

The lad had attracted the attention of the soldiers in the vicinity owing to his seeming loneliness. He was but a child, tossed hither and thither on the troubled ocean of London life. His mother's death had left him homeless and friendless, and he sought his nightly lodging in builders' yards or sheltered doorways. He lived for the most part on given him by some sympathetic soldiers of the Tower Guard.

SCRAPS OF BROKEN FOOD

"A 'ome," the lad echoed, "what's that, and where is it?"

By way of reply, his interested interrogator wrote on a slip of paper the words, "164, Shaftesbury Avenue"—the chief office of the National Refuges—and handed it to him. The lad duly applied at the address given him, and was subsequently despatched to one of the Society's country Homes at Bisley, which, it will be remembered, are worked in connection with the well-known training ships, Arethusa and Chichester, and a number of Metropolitan homes.

To reach Bisley, we follow the road from Brookwood Station, through gorse-clad stretches of country, and along breezy pine-crowned uplands until the well-planned and picturesque buildings of the Farm School are observed on a heathery ridge facing a gradual dip of glorious green sward at the extremity of Bisley Common. The position is ideal, and even a brief inspection of the institution suffices to convince that it is as well-managed as it is healthy. In the workshops busy bands of boys are nimbly engaged in tailoring or shoemaking. In the school, which is conducted on approved modern methods, the serried are intently studying a big map of the Transvaal. The Home contains in all 150 boys.

The dormitories, with "Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God," standing out boldly on the arch of the great window, are a vision of cleanliness and simple comfort. The drill-yard, gymnasium, library, swimming bath, are all noted with interest, and a glimpse of the lavatories, with their long rows of white towels, brings out the fact that every lad has a clean one provided daily, and that ophthalmia, that scourge of institution life, is unknown here.

Excellent discipline, careful personal consideration, added to a sensible system of rewards for good conduct, work wonders. In many ways one notes the which characterizes the Home. In little acts of kindness, especially to the weak, an excellent spirit shows itself, too, among the boys. Here, for instance, is a fragile little fellow of but eight years old, lately arrived from London, with drawn, ashen-grey features, and tiny limbs. The stronger lads assume a special and brotherly responsibility towards him. "They look after the little 'uns proper, do our boys," is the illuminating remark of fourteen year-old Sergeant Davis; "nobody 'd dare to interfere with 'em. Not they!" The superintendents, Mr. and Mrs. Mollett, who shepherd their flock so well, bring ripe experience and Christian consideration to bear upon the work. A few minutes' walk across the common brings us to the Shaftesbury Home, where, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Dye, yet another 150 lads are trained on similar lines and with equal blessing.

As may readily be imagined, a sad history attaches to many a boy. Here is one whose mother was on the verge of distraction, left a widow with ten children; there is another whose father is dying, and whose mother has undergone an operation by which she lost both legs. Varied as their conditions are, most of them came from city slumdom, where physical feebleness is the pitiful rule,—

Where misery is the daily lot
Of a thousand thousand lives.

In a place where all is evidently managed with spiritual ends in view, one scarcely needs to be told of the morning and evening gatherings for prayer, of the Sunday services and school, of old boys coming back to speak of the Saviour's love and of the training which has stood them in such good stead in the battle of life. But the chapel, peeping from a clump of graceful greenery, demands notice, as a species of reminder of the leading aim and purpose of the work, which is to make these young scions of England not merely prosperous men and good citizens, but sincere and humble followers of Jesus Christ.

Turning Londonwards, one cannot but combine with a prayerful hope for the welfare of these young lives, a wish that the public might realize, to a greater extent, how excellent a work is maintained, by divine blessing, in connection with the National Refuges. The secretary is Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

The Flower Girls' Mission.

THIS interesting work among the watercress and flower girls of London was set on foot at the instigation of Lord Shaftesbury, in 1866, and some of us have watched its steady growth with deep interest at Laystall Street, Clerkenwell Close; Foresters' Hall, Sekforde Street; and Woodbridge Mission Chapel; and have been much gladdened at the excellent work accomplished by Mr. John Groom.

For the purpose of effectually reaching the 1,000 flower women, who daily trade in the Metropolis, the huge area is divided into districts, and each prominent centre is provided with its own meeting place. Here the women are met regularly, week by week, by the deaconesses and missionaries, and are taught to mend and make their own clothes, and encouraged to invest portions of their earnings in clothing club, savings' bank, and other thrift agencies that are in active operation. All the girls are made to feel that somebody cares for them and loves them, and when their confidence and affection are gained, no effort is left untried to bring them into the Saviour's fold, and the Divine Spirit has rested in such a marked manner on these endeavours that not a few have been and are living witnesses of the transforming power of the Gospel.

One of the direct outcomes of getting into close touch with the women is that large numbers of the younger ones among them have been induced to abandon their street life, and more than 2,000 have been trained for domestic service, and have been placed in suitable situations, and many of them are highly valued by their employers for their integrity and general good conduct.

In dealing with the flower-sellers, Mr. Groom was most frequently brought into contact with crippled and deformed girls who were quite unable to compete with their sound and strong rivals in the streets, and at the same time altogether unfitted for service. Hence these poor, helpless, suffering ones are now taken into the industrial home in Sekforde Street, and are taught the art of

ARTIFICIAL FLOWER-MAKING.

There are thirty-seven so employed at the present time. In less than two years most of the girls become masters of their trade, and have no difficulty when leaving in securing a comfortable livelihood for the rest of their days.

Mention may also be made of the Orphanage for forsaken and absolutely destitute children, at Clacton-on-Sea. During the past twelve months, this institution has been visited with a gracious revival, and out of the 120 inmates, as many as seventy give clear evidence of having passed from death unto life. The precious work is still going on. On a recent visit, we noticed that there is still an acre of freehold ground in Mr. Groom's possession, only waiting for the means to erect five more pretty cottages.

The headquarters of the Mission is at Woodbridge Street, Clerkenwell. Mr. Groom is just now in poor health. His address is 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell. G. H.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 3.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—1 Cor. xi. 23-28.

THE Lord's Supper is the link between the first Advent and the second. Like the arc of the rainbow, it spans the sea of time that seethes between the two continents of the Past and Passing, and the Future and Becoming. It has two windows. Through the one we see the western light waning over the hill of Calvary; through the other, we see the roseate flush of the millennial dawn. In the Lord's Supper we "show forth" his death, and we encourage each other by saying it is but a little while "until He come." The ordinance is for the most part spoken of in terms of human devising, which have not only been open to objection, but sometimes misleading. Though they may suggest helpful thoughts, these by no means express the simple truth of Holy Scripture. We will consider these commonly-used expressions, as well as the Lord's own word "Covenant," and the Apostle's "Communion."

The Lord's Supper is sometimes spoken of as the Eucharist, from the Greek word for joy. It was the feast of joy, and should be still. As the children of Israel celebrated their deliverance from Pharaoh, in the Passover Feast, with every sign of joy, so as we remember the completeness of our redemption, by which we have been delivered from the penalty of a broken law, and the power of him that hath the power of death, translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and made nigh unto God, we may well take the cup of salvation, put into our hands at the Lord's Supper, and gladly ascribe all praise, honour, and glory to our Redeemer. "Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the feast."

Sometimes this sacred feast is spoken of as a Sacrament, from the Latin word for an oath. At the heathen altar in Carthage, Hannibal's mother made him swear eternal enmity to Rome—an oath that influenced his whole after-life. So, at the Lord's Table, young soldiers avow their allegiance to Him, abjuring the service of Satan, and crying, in the words which the leaders of the tribes addressed to David, "Thine are we, Jesus; and thine, Thou Son of God, Hosanna in the highest. We are thine, in life and death. Only be Thou magnified in our natures, which Thou hast purchased."

The Supper is also known as the Communion, because in it we have fellowship with one another. Those who partake of the one loaf are one body; and those who drink of the same cup are one in sympathy and spirit. We witness to the essential unity of all who have been redeemed by the same blood, and are united to the same Head. The unity of the Church is not a mechanical or outward one, the product of an ecclesiastical system, but the result of the thrill of a common life, and the throb of the impulse of one heart.

But our Lord's word is perhaps the sweetest; it is the Covenant which is foremost in his thoughts. "This is the cup of the new covenant in my blood." The wine reminds us of the blood that was shed on the cross, which sealed the new covenant recorded in Heb. viii.; and as we place the cup to our lips, we, so to speak, remind God of his covenant. We say to Him in effect, Remember thy covenant, on which Thou hast caused us to hope, and for thy Name's sake fulfil to us, all unworthy, its sacred provisions.

F. B. M.

The Christian Endeavour Conferences at Northfield were so successful that Mr. Moody has announced that they will be a regular feature of the closing weeks of the future Northfield Conferences.

The Christian Endeavourers of South India have recently assembled at their third Convention. The report told of 154 societies, with 4,854 members, an increase of 50 per cent. in members during the year. The delegates included 188 natives. The addresses and prayers were in three languages—English, Telugu, and Tamil.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas, Bristol, has been elected President of the Bristol and District C.E. Union, and intends to devote himself thoroughly to the duties of the office. Writing of his own society, Mr. Horsefield says: "There has been a marked increase in the membership during the year; but, still better, there can be no doubt that the meetings have resulted in very definite blessing."

From America, with the imprimatur of Dr. Clark himself, comes the account of a greatly increased interest in the Foreign Mission work of the C.E. Societies. After giving statistics, he says, "These show that the hearts of the young people in Christian Endeavour beat true to the claims of world-wide evangelization; that the missionary spirit is growing, as evinced by the very practical test of dollars and cents."

International S.S. Lessons.

LESSONS IN GIVING.—Mal. i. 6-11, iii. 8-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—1 Cor. ix. 7.

LESSON CONNECTION.

YOUNG people are apt to think that, because "Malachi" comes last in the Old Testament, he lived after the other writers. This is not so. He lived about the same time as Ezra and Nehemiah, of whom we have been learning. Nehemiah wrote the last History, Malachi the last Prophecy. (Let the scholars turn to their Bibles, and note the seventeen Books of History at the beginning, five of Poetry in the middle, seventeen Prophets at the end, and remember that the Prophets belong to the latter part of the history; and their messages agree with the period to which they belong.) Compare Mal. ii.-iii. with Nehemiah xiii., and note the similarity of expression.

MALACHI.

The name means "my messenger," or "the Messenger of Jehovah." He was sent with God's message to the careless and wicked Jews; most likely when Nehemiah had returned to Persia, before his second visit to Jerusalem. The message is first to the priests (chap. i. to ii. 9), then to the people (ii. 10 to iii. 15), concluding with precious promises and the foretelling of the next "Messenger," who would be the Son of God and Saviour of the world. It was about 400 years after this that Jesus came; but the people did not need another prophet, because now they had got the Bible that Ezra, the scribe, had collected and written. After the captivity a copy was placed in each synagogue.

MALACHI i. 6-11.

The message began by God telling these erring people that "He loved them." They said, "It does not look like it, when we are in such trouble." Then God shows them that it is their own sin which brought the trouble. Just as a naughty child whom his father was punishing said, "You don't love me a bit, or you would not hurt me so." Yet it was just because the father loved him that he tried to make him good. In these verses God's message is to the priests, He wanted to be a Father to his people (Deut. xxxii. 6; Jer. xxxi. 9) as well as their Lord; but they had treated Him worse than they would an earthly father, and offered to Him things they would not have dared to bring to an earthly master. (Read Lev. xxii. 19-25, and compare it with what they had done.) The sacrifices were a type or picture of the perfectly holy Saviour; hence the awful sin of bringing anything imperfect to represent Him. After doing this abomination, and offering to God what was useless for themselves, they complained that He had not blessed them. God said He would rather the Temple was shut up and no sacrifice or worship, than such mockery. (Read and ponder v. 14.)

PRACTICAL LESSON.

Are not some of us worse than these Jews? We often give to God that which is no use to us; we get all we want for personal gratification, and give God anything that is left; we go to God's house if it suits us, worship Him if we have nothing else to do, &c. God says, "Yet I have loved you and gave my well-beloved Son to be your Saviour!" Oh, what must He think of us! for He knows.

MALACHI iii. 8-12.

This is part of God's message to the people. How dreadful to be branded as a thief by men; infinitely worse for God to say, "You are robbing Me." Keeping for themselves things which God claimed as his by right. Before there were any Jews God had said that his people were always to give a tenth part of all they made, or grew, to Him; it was never to be counted as their own (Gen. xiv. 20; xxviii. 22). The law was very strict for the Jews (Lev. xxvii. 14-34; Deut. xxvi. 12-15). For us Christians it is a duty and a privilege to obey God's wish in this way. Disobedience brings God's disapproval. Restitution for past short-givings brings blessing and prosperity. Note the long-suffering and loving-kindness of our God in his continued promises. All we have is given us by God. He had withheld rain and their crops had failed, locusts devoured the produce of their fields. But all should be changed if they repented and returned.

PERSONAL LESSONS.

Am I robbing God? Of myself, or anything I have, or in anything I do, or do not? I must give what God asks for, and more if I can—not just to get blessing; but because He loves me and I love Him.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

SIXTH WEEK OF GENERAL MEETINGS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE special feature of the Evangelistic Campaign—that the meetings are to be, as much as possible, held within the walls of the co-operating churches—is being emphasized in various ways as the weeks pass. An arrangement was made by which, on Sabbath morning of last week, there was a general exchange of pulpits by the ministers over a wide area in the eastern portion of the city, including, especially, the districts of Bridgeton, Calton, and Mile-end. Advantage was taken of the opportunity thus afforded to impress on the members of the congregations the importance of joining heartily in the work.

One preacher, in our hearing, appealed most earnestly to his audience to open their eyes to what is going on round about them. The burden weighing most heavily on him was that of his unconverted and indifferent hearers, who are disposed to make little of such efforts. "The campaign is taking hold," he assured them, speaking from what he had seen with his own eyes. "Make no mistake about it. Men and women are being born again, and many more are being roused to anxiety about their souls.

THE CITY IS BEING DEEPLY STIRRED, and people are talking everywhere about what all this means."

It had been announced that another new departure would be made on Sabbath evening. St. Andrew's Hall—the most commodious in the city—was secured for a meeting to be addressed by Rev. John McNeill; and, nearly an hour before the time for beginning the service, all available space was filled to overflowing, while hundreds who came to the doors later were unable to gain admission. Workers interested in particular individuals, who had been aroused to a state of spiritual concern at different meetings during the week, found that large numbers of such persons had made their way to this meeting. Nor were they disappointed; for the Word was with power. The truth was presented in a manner specially suited to the needs of the anxious and doubters, based on the narrative of our Lord's dealing with Thomas (John xx. 24-29).

The taunt still thrown by many outsiders is that people go to Mr. McNeill's meetings as to entertainments, drawn by the expectation of clever and amusing utterances. This, however, can only be said by those who are ignorant of the real facts of the case. Sitting in the midst of gathering after gathering, and mixing freely with people at the doors, the one thing which has impressed us is the deep earnestness—with very few exceptions indeed—of old and young alike. One gentleman was taken by a friend, with whom we also are acquainted, to a meeting last week, to hear the preacher for the first time. On coming out he said he had heard many unfavourable criticisms of Mr. McNeill, but would never listen to a word of the kind again.

STUDENTS AT WORK.

Under the guidance of Mr. John Anderson, their principal, the students and staff of the Bible Training Institute have, since the beginning of the campaign, been taking a deep interest, as well as a large share, in the work. More especially wherever a Mission was known to be poorly supplied with helpers, or was languishing from any other special cause, they were ready to do all that in them lay, by prayer and effort, to give the work an impetus.

Last week Mr. Anderson and his friends undertook their first mission on their own account. The centre of operations in Gorbals district had been again changed, this time to John Knox Free Church, in Surrey Street. On Tuesday evening we found an excellent open-air meeting going on at some distance from the church, under the leadership of Mr. Richardson, Mr. Anderson's junior helper in the Institute. The singing of the students, who really form a thoroughly trained choir, attracted the attention of some who would not have stopped to hear a preacher. But when one after another of the young men stepped out, in intervals of the music, to give their clear and telling Gospel invitations, the crowd still remained to listen, and some found their way along with the procession to the church.

In the inside meeting, also, the singing of the students was an attractive feature. At the very start, prayer was offered (led by Rev. D. C. McNicol) for some, who, on previous evenings, had come under deep conviction. During the early part of the service two of the young men gave after the manner characteristic of Mr. Anderson's training. This method of conducting a meeting does not lend itself to the same thorough exposition of subjects as some others, but that its short, sharp calls to repentance—and to faith in the finished work of Christ—are fruitful, is abundantly proved wherever the young people go. The using of every diversity of gift is one of the aims of the Campaign arrangements, and this is one that grows in popularity as it becomes better known.

The opening word was spoken by Mr. Forman from Mark viii. 36. He showed that the Lord had been laying down the rules of discipleship when He brought in this question, and that the whole passage has a personal application to-day. Men and women differ in many ways, yet there are certain broad principles that run through the experience of all; and a portion in the home above will not be ours unless we seek it, and that earnestly. Speaking from Heb. ii. 1 (R.V.), Mr. Galloway pointed out particularly the bearing of the word "therefore" in the text—if we do not hear in the day of grace, we must do so in the day of judgment. Mr. Anderson continued along the same line of thought, dealing with "the things that were heard," spoken by our Lord, confirmed by those who heard them, and ratified by God. (1) Of the Father, that the attitude and thought of God to man is of infinitely tender grace and compassion. (2) Of Christ Himself—the sent of the Father. (3) Of his supremacy—standing alone. (4) Of his being, because of this, the great test question for men. (5) Of the worth of the soul. (6) Of the responsibility of decision. The last point was pressed home with special force, Mr. Anderson insisting on the point that no one could leave the meeting unsaved without the responsibility of his condition resting on himself. As the meeting was closed he appealed to any who felt impressions not to leave without having them confirmed, lest contact with the world should immediately dispel them.

Of a meeting of nearly 400, about 100 remained on an invitation to become acquainted with the students, and to talk about spiritual things. The young men and women mixed freely through the meeting, and the spontaneity with which earnest conversations were entered into was noteworthy. It was not only an inquiry meeting, but also a time of mutual helpfulness among God's people; yet, scattered through the pews, there were a goodly number, some well advanced in life, who showed that the one desire of their hearts was for spiritual light. A most satisfactory work is going on in this mission. By special request of the minister (Rev. John Buchan) and local workers, the meetings are to be prolonged for a week beyond the original plan.

IN THE CALTON DISTRICT.

On Wednesday evening we made our way through one of the most densely-populated districts of the city, and found a bright, happy, open-air gathering at a street corner in the Calton. For the first time we saw the united nature of the campaign demonstrated by the presence of the Gospel lamps belonging to two neighbouring congregations, and bearing their respective names—United Presbyterian and Congregational. The testimony of ministers and people showed how completely every other consideration has been subordinated to the attainment of the great common end in view.

During last week the mission was being conducted in the Congregational Church, Moncur Street (Rev. William Halliday), and the preacher was Rev. John Macintosh, of Motherwell. The workers have been much cheered by the manifest power accompanying the ministry of the Word. Clear and decided conversions have taken place every evening, while others who were brought under conviction, and were spoken with, returned again and again. Said one brother to the writer: "It makes me feel young again. I could almost dance for joy."

At the opening of the service, the evangelist sang, as a solo, the hymn beginning, "To the hall of the feast came the sinful and fair." His subject was, "The Three Wonders at the Cross of Christ," and he sought to make plain the meaning of them. I. The Rending in Twain of the Vail of the Temple. II. The Darkening of the Sun. III. The Opening of the Graves.

In giving a tenderly-worded invitation to any who wished conversation to remain, Mr. Macintosh spoke a word of encouragement that went to the hearts of all who were helping. He explained that a blessing always came to them in leading a soul to Jesus, inasmuch as leader and seeker went into his Presence together, and were baptized alike with his Spirit.

The Christian Endeavour badge was prominent in the meeting, and an excellent spirit seemed to pervade all who were taking part.

IN THE CENTRE OF THE CITY.

A mission was conducted during the last two weeks, in the Tron Parish Church, Trongate, by Rev. William Donald, of Kilmarnock. The meetings were good, but unfortunately the work hardly touched the slum neighbourhood in the midst of which the church is situated. Through the open-air testimony, and the distribution of announcements, passers-by on the busy thoroughfare were arrested in considerable numbers. The Lord has been working in the meeting, and souls have been saved; but it was usually found that the persons had come from a considerable distance. If, by moving the centres of work from church to church, the immediate surroundings are expected to be reached, special arrangements should be made in such cases as this. Large bands of specially chosen workers must be drawn from a wide area, who will go down in prayer and faith to attack sin and Satan in their special strongholds.

When we visited the church last week, on Thursday evening, we found the meeting an interesting and profitable one. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah was read and expounded in a fresh and helpful manner. The address was based on Philip's preaching of "Jesus," and its effects (Acts viii. 35). At the close few of those present showed any disposition to leave before the after-meeting. A season of prayer was much enjoyed by God's people, while the few who were seeking salvation found many ready to talk with them.

A REMARKABLE MISSION IN GOVAN.

The crowding out of Mr. McNeill's meetings in Free St. Mary's Church, Govan—which we anticipated last week—took place after a very few days. Two thousand people could be crowded into the church; but on several evenings the accommodation fell far short of the demands made on it. The minister (Rev. Robert Howie) and others, who remember well the revivals of 1874 and 1885, declare that not even in those years was the district so moved as it has been during these weeks, nor were crowds so eager to hear. People belonging to all classes in the community have been coming to the meetings, some from the very depths being won as trophies for the Saviour.

When the closing evening came, the very appearance of the audience was an eloquent testimony to the drawing power of the Gospel, when presented in simplicity and power. Portable seats were introduced wherever possible, and when they were filled the gallery stairs were appropriated, while last comers stood in odd corners. We were impressed by the presence of a much greater number of young people than on our previous visit—not children, but strong, vigorous young men and women in their later "teens" and early "twenties." At the beginning of the mission, when men and women in middle life were coming out for the Saviour in large numbers, Mr. McNeill called out yearningly whether none of "the young fellows" were coming also. Later on it was manifest that they, too, were being drawn into the current, and much of the best young life in Govan has been dedicated to the Lord.

The subject of the address on Friday evening last was "The Healing of the Man who was Born Blind" (John ix.), and the address was partly directed to the needs of new converts and restored backsliders, as well as to outsiders.

Mr. McNeill's own desire, as well as that of his co-workers, was to have continued in Govan for some time; with probably two churches open each evening, and gatherings of men and women respectively at 7 o'clock and 8.15. But the arrangements of the Campaign had been made for a considerable time in advance, and so it was necessary for Mr. McNeill to go to another part of the city, and to relinquish this work into other hands. It is hoped that he may be able to return to Govan before the winter is over. In a few days he expects to come again into contact with large bodies of the same workmen who came to the meetings, by taking part in the dinner-hour gatherings in the shipbuilding yards. "Carry on the work" was Mr. McNeill's prayer to God, and his call to workers and converts. He specially urged that, in Gospel, temperance, and evangelistic meetings in the churches, a new place might be given for words of testimony, alike by those who had "got a lift" in the Christian life, and those who had found their way into it for the first time.

AFTERNOON SERVICES.

On Sabbath evening Mr. McNeill intimated that it was purposed to repeat the meeting, at least on the following Sabbath, and, on behalf of the committee and himself, expressed pleasure at the success of the first, at least in point of attendance, while they prayed that God would make it successful also in the higher sense. He said that next day he would also open another week of the afternoon services for business men. The addresses would each be thirty-five minutes long, but he preferred that hearers should come for the whole hour. They might not get anything in the address, and yet get something in the prayer or the praise. He apologized for the advertisement, "No ladies admitted"; but he could not help himself. The men filled the place. He had found that business men could spare the time quite well.

From Monday onward the same large audiences continued. The opening address was based on the meeting of the Lord with the Rich Young Ruler; and the real nature of the Lord's dealings with men brought out. Emphasis was laid on the fact that the test applied was not theological, but one of such a practical nature as they could all appreciate.

On Friday the audience was asked for an expression of opinion as to the continuance of the services, and a ringing cheer was the unmistakable response to an offer to do so for another week. It is not intended, however, to go beyond this fifth week, which has commenced as we go to press, in the present place of meeting. Beginning with next Monday, as we have already said, it is Mr. McNeill's intention to take part in the work in the shipbuilding yards about the same hour. When the meetings in city are resumed, it is proposed to change the centre of work, and thus, if possible, reach a new constituency.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

At present one of the most cheering developments of the Campaign movement is the work among the men employed in the engineering works and shipbuilding yards on the Clyde. Begun in a small way, the meetings at once took hold, and have spread up and down both banks of the river. Three or four meetings are held nearly every day during the dinner hour, and the men come in hundreds to hear the simple preaching of the Gospel.

In the evenings, much the larger, and apparently more fruitful, part of the work is that among the children. Crowds numbering up to 1,500 and 2,000 are coming together in different parts of the city. In one case we were informed that about 500 remained to an after-meeting, but it was found quite impossible to deal with anything like the whole number with any degree of efficiency.

Instances are reported of whole families having been brought to decision during the course of a mission. In one case a girl was led to the Saviour on a Monday. On Tuesday she brought a brother, who also found the light. A second brother yielded his heart on the following evening. They at once set to work to influence their companions, and some of these are also finding their way to the meetings.

In Govan, during the last juvenile mission, the workers available were far too few to speak with the children who desired it; and Mr. Howie is now appealing to those who have been blessed at the adult mission to find in this way an outlet for the activities of the new spiritual life.

We hear of small praying bands in different parts of the city, who meet regularly to present the Campaign before the Throne of Grace; and we understand this feature is extending as the work proceeds and new areas are entered.

Scottish Notes.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, Lord Provost Chisholm said the Society was in a flourishing condition. Branches are as numerous as they ever have been; and, in the case of some that have been dropped, there was no loss to Christian work in general, inasmuch as churches have sprung up in place of them.

The Edinburgh Rescue Shelter reports 159 girls received during the past twelve months. Of these, twenty-seven were returned to their parents, seventy sent to homes, twenty-four to situations, six to hospital, nine to poor-houses, one married, while thirteen went away, and nine remained at the close of the year. A new shelter is just about to be opened.

The Protestant Institute of Scotland has arranged for the winter courses of lectures in Glasgow and Edinburgh, for the benefit of students and other young people, beginning this week. The lecturer is Rev. Professor James Spence, and the general subject, "The Dogmas of Papal Supremacy and Infallibility tested by Scripture and History."

A mission week in Hamilton Presbytery of the Church of Scotland was inaugurated by a meeting on Saturday, November 18. Rev. Dr. Pagan (Moderator of the General Assembly) presided, and among others present were the Rev. Dr. Bruce (Banff) and Rev. Dr. Hamilton (Hamilton). The chairman mentioned that forty-five ministerial and three lay deputies would take part in the meetings, along with the ministers of the forty-seven congregations. Addresses were also given by the Rev. Professor Cooper (Glasgow), Rev. George Wilson (Edinburgh), and Rev. A. T. Donald (Mertoun).

A conference on "Life and Work," in connection with the United Presbyterian Church, was held in Dundee last week. The subject of "The Young in Church and Home" was introduced by Rev. T. F. Best, chairman. Mr. J. H. Smith spoke on "The Church as a Spiritual Agency," and emphasised the Gospel itself and the power of prayer as the forces available. Rev. John W. Stirling (Kaffraria) spoke on Foreign Missions. Dealing with Home Missions, Rev. James Aitken referred to the difficulty of reaching the middle and upper classes, and urged that much might be done to prevent the increase of indifference by developing home religion, so that children might be kept from drifting away.

The Free Church and Sacredotalism.

THE Free Church of Scotland recently issued (with instructions that it be read from the pulpits of Free Churches) a statement regarding the sacerdotal movement in England and Scotland. Addressed to the members and adherents of the Free Church, it is signed by Dr. Stewart as Moderator, and is remarkable for its lucidity and quiet, yet decisive tone. We extract the following:—

Sacerdotalism, as the word implies, consists essentially in the interposition, in theory and in practice, of a priestly caste between man and God. It establishes an order of human priests in the Church of Christ, apart from the general priesthood of all believers—men who claim an exclusive right to offer sacrifices, to minister at altars, and to perform other priestly functions in the Church. Round this central error many other unscriptural doctrines and practices have gathered, which are either altogether identical with, or closely akin to, those of the Church of Rome.

Regeneration is not necessarily bound up with the administration of baptism, whether to infants or adults. That Sacrament is the sign and pledge, but not "the mystic and unfailing instrument," of the work of the Holy Spirit. The Lord's Supper is not a sacrifice, but a New Testament feast of thankful and believing commemoration of the one all-sufficient sacrifice of Christ. In the reception of the bread and wine at the Lord's table, believers have a blessed communion with Christ, really present, according to his own promises (Matt. xviii. 20; xxviii. 18-20; John xiv. 21-23); but "that real and Divine Presence is spiritual, not bodily or material."

The General Assembly cordially commend to all ministers and other office-bearers of the Church, as well as to its members and adherents, the valuable statements on this subject, made on May 26 last by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.; also as a valuable storehouse of reliable information, regarding the doctrines and practices of the Anglican Romanizing and Ritualistic party, Walsh's Secret History of the Oxford Movement.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

THE annual meeting of this well-known and successful Mission was recently held at Edinburgh. The superintendent, Professor A. R. Simpson, was in the chair, and the enthusiasm of the large gathering indicated the lively interest which is centred in this institution.

In a few words of congratulation and encouragement, the CHAIRMAN said that the work committed in New Testament days to Apostles and evangelists was fittingly carried on by the members of the Mission, though claiming no Apostolic succession.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBERTSON, who discharges the duties of secretary, gave some interesting details of the movements of the Mission during the past year. Mr. THOMAS ORMISTON, the treasurer, in his statement of the accounts announced that the income for the year had been £737 11s. 4½d., and the expenditure £428 9s. 11d. Of the balance, £229 18s. 8d. had been transferred to the reserve and building fund, and £79 2s. 9d. was a balance at credit in the bank. The reserve and building fund showed that there was a sum of £509 13s. 8d. at its credit at the close of the year.

Mr. G. A. BARCLAY reported very favourably upon the work and finances of the Gospel Temperance Department. Rev. Dr. CUNNINGHAM gave an address on his experiences in America. Various phases of Christian enterprise and vitality are recorded in the annual report, to which we hope to refer at an early date.

Palmistry at a Church Bazaar.—At a bazaar held in aid of St. George's Church, Wolverhampton, a few days ago, one of the attractions was announced in these terms:—"Special engagement of the celebrated palmist, Madame St. Ledger-York, of London, and the well-known phrenologist, Professor Thorneycroft." Unfortunately for the patrons of the entertainment, the lady palmist and clairvoyant was (the Birmingham Daily Post says) "arrested by the Wolverhampton police a few days before the bazaar opened." Nothing daunted, however, Professor Thorneycroft entered upon his "delineations of palmistry, phrenology, and physiognomy." Thereupon the Chief Constable (Captain Burnett) wrote to the vicar, intimating that unless the palmistry business was at once closed, he should arrest the professor under the Vagrancy Act, and summon the vicar for aiding and abetting in the breach of the law. The caution thus administered was effectual in stopping proceedings which outraged the consciences of many Christian people in Wolverhampton.

A Fish's Discourse.

A TALKING fish seems stranger to you than a talking beast or a talking bird, because birds and beasts, and insects, too, usually produce some sound, and often that sound is a very pleasant one; but fish, as you all know, are not accustomed to make any noise with mouth or throat. However, I propose talking to you, and I hope that what I say may be interesting.

We fish are so abundant, and so palatable for eating, that we could very easily provide food sufficient for all the human family, if other supplies failed. But, of course, we would much rather sport in the lakes, and rivers, and seas of the earth than be caught and eaten. When you think how wonderfully we are made, inside and out, how beautifully we are shaped and coloured, and how very graceful are all our motions, does it not seem a shame that thousands of men should be employed to entrap us? Could we laugh as you laugh, you would often hear our laugh above the tossing waves and roaring winds, when thinking how skilfully we have escaped cunningly laid nets—how your time and labour have been lost, and you have returned to shore with empty nets, and empty boats, and vexed minds.

We have sometimes suffered for the sins of others, though we ourselves were perfectly harmless. Look at the plague of blood sent upon Egypt. We were living a free and pleasant life in the waters of the Nile, but directly those waters were turned to blood to punish the wicked people, our ancestors and their companions died. But that mighty Being who made you and us alike sometimes uses us in strange ways. He used one of my great ancestors in a very strange way. One of the Israelitish prophets, Jonah by name, was so cowardly as to run away from duty when sent by God to Nineveh. After vainly seeking refuge in a ship, he was cast into the sea, where he was swallowed by a great fish, and within it he remained for three days. But God saw him there. The great fish found it most uncomfortable to swim about day after day carrying the truant prophet, so nearing the land he opened his mouth and cast Jonah forth. Then the prophet was ready for his appointed work; he went to the wicked city, and brought the people of Nineveh to repentance.

At another time, a later and greater Prophet made use of us on more than one occasion. He commanded one of those standing near to cast into the sea a hook and line. One of our innumerable family was caught, and inside was found a piece of money, which was used wherewith to pay tribute to the rulers. And did not He, who went about doing good, once feed 5,000 people with five barley loaves and two fishes, and at another time 4,000 with seven loaves and a few of ourselves! No wonder, then, that when by the Sea of Galilee, after fishermen had been toiling all night without catching one of us, Christ should command the net to be put down at the right side of the ship, and that at once it should become so full of great fish that it nearly broke.

We cannot live out of water, so we cannot be companions or playmates with you, nor can we draw your burdens, or carry you, like the noble horse does. But one great dignity we shall treasure as belonging to us. It is that the closest friends and truest disciples of Him whom God sent as the Saviour of the world were chosen from among men who had from their youth been accustomed to catch us in their nets and boats. Having thus laboured, and being filled with their great Master's Spirit, they were fitted to become the first heralds of the Gospel.

And did not the Lord make his disciples to be "fishers of men?" They had been catchers of fish; He called them to something higher. The diligence and skill which had been expended in catching fish for food were to be devoted in future to the work of bringing men and women to know Christ and find their satisfaction in Him. So we fish, by reminding you of these things, echo the great obligation resting upon all Christian people. It is written of Christ that "He is Lord of all"—"for Him were all things created." If so, and if "the sea is his, for He made it," then we may praise God by our activity in the waters, as the birds do by their motions in the air. "O ye seas and floods, bless ye the Lord! O ye whales, and all that move in the waters, bless ye the Lord! Praise Him, and magnify Him, for ever!"

A Very Good Suggestion

comes from a parent, that I should announce, some time beforehand, the book or books from which the Prize Competition questions will be set, so that my young readers may be able to familiarize themselves with them, and thus decrease the study required at the time of examination. Next Christmas, therefore, the Prize Questions will be set from the books of Ezra and Nehemiah.

A New Mission Centre.

BY steady movement the influence of the Talbot Tabernacle expands. To the great joy of worshippers and their friends, a second mission centre has been occupied; and the new Mission Hall, situated in Faraday Road, North Kensington, was opened, with appropriate services, on Tuesday last week.

The premises were built as a public-house and concert-hall, and until recently were known as St. Michael's Club. The freehold was purchased a few months ago for £1,750, and the alterations necessary for the building to serve its higher purpose have been successfully carried out.

Pastor Frank White has not only received the hearty co-operation of his church in the undertaking, but also the practical sympathy of other Christian people in the district. The opening services were largely attended. At the afternoon meeting, held in the Talbot Hall, Mr. D. C. Apperly presided, and addresses were given by Pastors James Stephens and Frank White, also by Mr. W. H. Gaussen, who, as treasurer, presented a financial statement, which showed that £2,500 had been received towards the sum required, leaving £800 still to be raised before the building would be free from debt.

Sir Richard Thorne Thorne presided at the evening meeting, which was held in the Tabernacle and was very enthusiastic. He maintained that no church was healthy unless it had something to do. He acknowledged the signal of blessing of God upon the work.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon followed with a happy address, in which kindly reference was made to the work of Mr. White and his church.

Then came Pastor White himself, with words of love for his helpers and concern for the perishing multitudes. Surveying past service, he said that for twenty-three years he had, by the grace of God, been permitted to labour in the Gospel there; and although he must needs soon close his ministry, he was glad to think that there were those who would carry on the work as he had been privileged to do it.

An address was delivered by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton (Leicester), who emphasized the importance of prayer, if our labour was to be successful. Mr. N. H. Patrick (formerly a missionary in North Africa, who is to help at the new hall) made an earnest appeal on behalf of the funds. We understand that £150 has already been received in response to this appeal.

London City Mission.

THE fact that the City Mission has always treated its aged and disabled workers with generous consideration will not lessen the strength of the Committee's appeal in connection with the annual statement of the Disabled Missionaries', Widows' and Orphan's Fund. It appears that, since the founding of the Society in 1834, no less than 320 of its agents have been called away.

During the last twelve months, four veterans and one widow have died; while ten worn-out missionaries have been placed on the Fund, making the total receiving help 57, besides 73 widows and orphans. To meet the needs of these, with others who will be chargeable to the Fund during the winter, Committee will have to disburse about £4,500 in the ensuing twelve months. Rev. P. B. Power, in a letter which is embodied in the report, strongly commends the appeal to the sympathies of Christian friends.

Y.W.C.A. — In connection with the world's Y.W.C.A. week of intercession, special gatherings were held daily at the central headquarters in London, 26, George Street, Hanover Square. On each day a short address was given during the first half hour, after which the meeting was thrown open for prayer on behalf of some special branch of the work. In the daily addresses Rev. E. Grose Hodge spoke on "Praise;" Rev. A. E. Barnes Lawrence emphasized various aspects of personal consecration; and the message from Rev. A. W. Evans was from 1 John ii. 1, setting forth our Saviour as the one mediator, advocate, and propitiation. Rev. Dr. G. Hanson reviewed, in terse and helpful words, some chief evangelical truths, and Rev. E. W. Moore spoke on "Victory," drawing illustrations from the experiences of Israel in the capture of Jericho.

N.E. London Missions.

THE annual meeting of the North-East London Gospel Missions, with which are connected the Homes of Rest at Lancing-on-Sea, was held on Tuesday last week at the principal centre of the work in London, Earlham Hall, Dalston. Mr. John McCall, who presided, was assisted by a goodly number of friends and workers of the Mission, and a very large and interested congregation bore evidence to the increasing vitality of a mission whose establishment dates back for more than thirty years.

It was impossible to listen, without deep feeling, to Mr. Chorley's touching stories of love's best service amongst the half-famished "bare-foots" of Bow Common, the foul, violent, and passion-fettered match-factory-girls, together with the drunken and dissolute, on the one hand; the feeble and frail, "who linger awhile in homes which their dearest have left," and the tender-aged children lying in homes of penury, crippled and maimed before the battle of life has fairly begun, on the other. Nor is the tale complete without an account of effort amongst betrayed and fallen, the despairing and the dying.

Then the Homes of Rest at Lancing-on-Sea, including a rustic ivy-covered cottage, pleasantly near the quiet village, yet overlooking the blue waters of the Channel, where some of the aged and dying widows, who, having lived beyond their working day, and without home, or friends to keep them, are being spared the uncongenial shelter of the workhouse, and are ending their days in peace. It was refreshing to learn, also, that more than a thousand poor ones had enjoyed a stay by the sea for an average of two weeks during the summer months, making an average of 130 beds occupied for the whole season. These included ailing mothers with weakly babies, and aged pilgrims beyond four-score years. Among the men received were dock labourers, costermongers, railway servants, a crossing-sweeper, and a policeman, broken down in health, and, in some cases, far gone in consumption; but all of whom received great help—some returning to employment after months of enforced idleness.

The need of securing the excellent detached premises now offered the Mission for a Men's Home was dwelt upon, the chairman kindly offering £50 if the remaining £750 can be raised by Christmas, when the option expires. The premises directly face the sea, and contain twenty good rooms. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and comprise two and a-half acres in all. Needless to say the Homes are conducted upon Christian principles, and several very happy cases of conversion were recorded during the past few months.

To show how the poor appreciate these Homes, it was mentioned that more than £800 had been received in partial payments for the benefits received during the past year, while the total of the donations for their support only amounted to £600! Further, the entire cost of management of the four Homes does not amount to £100 per annum.

The speakers at the meeting dwelt upon the paths of service followed. During the evening the chairman had the pleasure of presenting Mr. and Mrs. Chorley, on behalf of the staff and friends visiting the Lancing Homes, with an electro-plated tea and coffee service and biscuit jar, as a token of esteem and love. Communications for the Mission should be addressed Mr. William Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, London, N.

Blackburn Evangelical Protestant Institute is an exemplary agency. It is hoped that others will be founded on similar lines, and with a like object. The Institute has been formed to maintain the principles of the reformation, spread biblical knowledge, promote the, moral, spiritual, and intellectual welfare of its members, the circulation of Protestant literature, and further any efforts for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad. Mr. W. H. Walsh has been appointed librarian, and as the Institute has to commence with very few books, friends are asked to help in the formation of a library. The address of the Institute is 3A, Exchange Street, Blackburn.

Obituary.

REV. SIR ALGERNON COOTE.

THE death of Rev. Sir Algernon Coote, who passed away on November 21, at the age of eighty-two, removes a cultured clergyman of the Evangelical school. He laboured successfully at Marsh Gibbon, Bucks, and Nonington, Kent. In 1895 he succeeded to the baronetcy. He has published a volume of sermons, preached by him at the age of eighty in the parish church of his Irish residence. His eldest son, Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, secretary of the Orphan Working School, succeeds to the title.

MRS. C. COSTER, YEOVIL.

This devoted servant of Jesus Christ passed to her reward a few days ago (November 17). Faithful in all her house, she was ever ready unto every good work. Active in visiting the sick, and any who were in need of help, Mrs. Coster always had a cheering word and a smile for all who came in contact with her. Not a few are mourning the loss of one who will be sadly missed, and "only remembered by what she has done." The call came suddenly, but she was ready.

REV. DR. CHALMERS.

The announcement of the death of Dr. John Chalmers, the missionary, will be received with general regret. A telegram states that he passed away, on the 22nd, at Chemulpo. He was born at New Deer, Aberdeen, in 1825. Many years since he went out to Hong Kong, and superintended the press of the London Missionary Society. In 1859 he settled at Canton, but subsequently returned to Hong Kong.

He remained connected with the Society until his death, but several times revisited Great Britain. In 1897, the death of his wife was a serious blow to him. They had hoped to celebrate jointly their missionary jubilee. After a visit home he returned to China, and was one of the shipwrecked passengers of the Scotsman, which foundered at the mouth of the St. Lawrence river. He proceeded, however, to Chemulpo, in Corea, where he died at the house of his son. Dr. Chalmers's writings, whether in Chinese or English, were chiefly connected with missionary work.

THE LATE SIR WILLIAM DAWSON.

Writing with respect to the great scientist, whose departure we recorded last week, Mr. Henry Varley says: "It was my joy to have several interviews with him in September last year, in the pleasant seaside cottage, where he usually spent the summer months, at Little Metis, about 200 miles below Quebec, on the shores of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

"The vigorous life, both of mind and body, was declining, not very rapidly, but surely. He knew it well, and nothing was more marked than the deep interest he showed in the great spiritual truths which, despite many infirmities, held his mind and heart in peace with God. Lady Dawson invited a number of residents and visitors whilst I gave some Bible readings.

"Sir William was just strong enough to join us, and to say some words to us. It was not the prominent scientific thinker and teacher that spoke out of the fragile temple, but the man of God. How simple, definite, and sweet his testimony to the value of our Lord's infinite sacrifice for sins! How inspiring to us all was Sir William's expressed confidence in the Lord Jesus Christ!"

The Irish Mission to the Jews is an unsectarian organization, propagating the Gospel among the 5,000 Jews in Ireland. Its stations are in Belfast, Dublin, and Cork, and the missionary visits other places where Jews are to be found. The work of the Mission includes distributing New Testaments and tracts, and other helpful endeavours. The Mission has entered upon its third year, and the committee are encouraged by many visible results of the efforts put forth. The hon. secretaries are Mrs. J. H. Julian (Cork) and Mr. James Tedford (7, Wellington Park, Belfast).

Notes & Comments

WE are sorry to learn that our aged brother, Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, is very ill, apparently failing. He is ninety-seven years of age. An interview with him appeared in our issue of October 26. His immediate friends affectionately ask prayer on his behalf, and thanksgiving for his long and precious testimony by life and speech.

The recent visit of the Emperor of Germany to the Queen, while it was kept strictly private and free from public ceremonial, is not likely to pass without momentous consequences. It is clear that the family gathering gave great pleasure to both sides, and will, no doubt, help that personal understanding between the leaders of both peoples which is the surest guarantee of international amity and goodwill. Already semi-official utterances give hints of a better understanding in the future between Great Britain and Germany than in the past. The increasing friendship of both countries with America is based on community of interests, and by the free intermingling of all three races, especially in the United States of America. An unwritten alliance between the three for the preservation of the world's peace would be an incalculable boon, and there are, fortunately, many signs of such a rapprochement.

An esteemed correspondent, deploring the heartless language in which some write and speak of the sad war, asks Christian people to look at the proceedings from a more serious point of view.

(1) What do men fight for? For 'earthly advantage —gold, prestige, honour. How long do these last? (2) One step further—"Whence come wars and fightings among you?" The Apostle answers his own question—"Come they not hence—even of your lusts that war in your members?" (3) Whatever may be the end or object of war, it sends souls into eternity unprepared; it shuts the door of opportunity to the unsaved. The sword will not reform men, and to wield it is contrary to the spirit of Christ and Gospel precepts.

These are solemnizing thoughts, propounded by "A Member of the Church of England." In peace, as well as during war, such-like saddening questions arise. They may be asked in time of famine and plague—as in India; and at home, the drink curse justifies the inquiry—Who is responsible for sending the souls of thousands of English men and women every year into eternity unprepared?

During recent weeks we have given several letters and intimations of grave omen from the regions of India upon which the pall of famine is at present falling. Already there is want in many directions, and the worst is yet to come. Missionaries are looking to friends in the home lands to remember the need of the natives, and to make it possible for those who preach to do something substantial in the way of practising the love of Christ. The mission agencies represent a relief machinery already planted and ready for work. While praying God to avert the calamity which is so sadly feared, Christians should support the philanthropic endeavours of their brethren, who are now occupying positions of great anxiety in the midst of famine-stricken millions of our fellow-subjects in India.

Something, and a very significant something, of the difference between French ways of ruling and English ways of teaching unchristianized nations may be seen in the French rule in Madagascar and the missionaries' methods in Samoa. In Madagascar, General Gallieni says:—

I ordered French to be compulsory at every school, public or private. Half the time of the whole class was to be devoted to this one subject. The time is not far distant when all the Hovas will speak French. They are aware that no Hova stands a chance of getting any Government employment, or any favour whatever, unless he speaks French.

In Samoa the missionaries have for sixty years just sought to save the people, not Anglicize them, and now it is not easy to find Samoan pastors or native missionaries who can speak sufficient English to enable them to communicate on common subjects with strangers. It does not seem right that islands which contain some 35,000 persons, 25,000 of whom have been educated in L.M.S. schools, should have been handed over to Germany without any consultation with the wishes of the people themselves.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson reminds us that there are possible dangers ahead in Samoa; e.g., new laws may seriously affect the course of education, and training institutions and boarding schools may be carried on with difficulty; taxation may be so increased as to cripple the power of the people to give to religious objects.

The new government may prove so much more vigorous in its administration of justice, and may make laws so foreign to the temper and thought of the people, as to produce friction and even rebellion, in which case there is always a danger lest the members of the mission, which was in the land before new rule was established, should be suspected of exerting a mischievous influence and be charged with disloyalty.

It seems to us that a society which has done so much for Samoa as the L.M.S. has a moral right to approach the German Government on these questions and on the important question of religious liberty. Our Foreign Office should secure it a hearing.

M. Pobedonostseff, the Chief Procureur of the Russian Synod, has recently been returning to his charges against the exponents of the evangelical faith in Russia. In an official pamphlet he dwells on the perils to the established social order in the dissemination of Stundist and such like views. He charges their leaders with preaching rank Atheism and Nihilism. As the Stundists carefully refrain from interference with political questions, and restrict themselves solely to preaching doctrines which are regarded as heresy by the Greek Church, there can be no truth in these accusations. A more law-abiding and peaceable community does not exist anywhere than these patient and God-fearing people. They have borne a noble witness to the Gospel in the teeth of long-continued persecution and calumny. The charges of the Russian Procureur may lead to another outbreak of fanatical interference with Stundist liberties; they cannot for long retard the truth, which ever thrives most under the darkest persecution.

Protests are still being made on all hands against infringement of the sanctity of the Lord's Day. One of the latest to bear testimony to the evil of any approach in our country to a Continental Sunday is the venerable Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester. His words will be read by not a few with much appreciation.

The religious use of the day, and its character as a day of rest, are distinct. If there were no worship assemblies, there would none the less be need for it (the Sabbath), in order to the physical well-being of a community, and still more in order to preserve the vigour and spring of mind and energy of toil in the rest of the week.

The surest way to make daily work a burden too heavy is to rob a people of God's gift of a Sabbath. Experience shows that in the Latin races of Southern Europe, where work is listless because unremitting, and the pleasure of some means the toil of not a few.

They are the worst enemies of the labouring classes who seek to destroy the seventh day's rest from labour. If we begin by making it a day of pleasure, we shall soon find it a day of toil.

The works of Mr. Moody have had a very large circulation throughout the English-speaking world, and have been translated into the tongues of other nations. To the great satisfaction of himself, and such as have reason to value his practical ministry, these books, thirteen in number, have now been issued in popular editions (paper, 6d.; limp cloth, 9d. each). Whether expounding Scripture, applying doctrine, advocating Bible study, or furnishing points for preachers, these volumes have not only a distinctive character, but an unquestioned value as statements of Divine truth and forms of Gospel appeal. Accordingly, they are on the preacher's well-stocked shelves as well as in the scanty collections of more humble workers. The popular editions are sure of a wide circulation, especially as sold in complete sets made up in neat cases (paper, 5s., cloth, 7s. 6d., nett—the set of thirteen; postage 8d. extra. Morgan & Scott). Many a worker would value such a Christmas gift.

To turn over the old letters of saintly men and women is like turning over dried rose leaves. Such are the letters of McCheyne, of Dundee, in one of which, dated March 9, 1843, he records an experience when he went on his visit to the East:

"Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." When I had my fever abroad Mr. Bonar whispered that verse into my ear. I had nearly lost all my faculties, I could remember nothing except that I was far from home, but that verse kept sounding in my ears when I was nearly insensible. I called and He delivered me.

We may sometimes think that the sick and dying are too far gone, too feeble, to receive even a whisper of comfort, but we are probably mistaken. When sight has failed, and the sufferer appears to be unconscious, the hearing often remains sensitive to all that is done and spoken, and the spirit can still receive and retain messages of love and peace. A whisper may give it wings of faith for its flight homeward.

Proposals are being renewed for the establishment of something like a Dominican Order of Preachers in the Anglican Church, whose sole duty it would be to preach the Gospel something after the manner of the friars of that name. The suggestion is that these preachers should be under the threefold vow of obedience, celibacy, and poverty; and that they should, on entering the Order, hand over all their possessions to the community, with a view to keeping down the working expenses. There does not seem to be anything in the plan which cannot be as fully attained by the careful development of the gift of lay-preaching as we find it practised in many of the Nonconformist Churches. An establishment of a separate priestly order for the purpose savours too strongly of that mimicry of Romanism which is just now the besetting sin of the Anglican Church. There are thousands of earnest and competent laymen in that Church whose talents are lying idle for lack of encouragement and use. It will be a bright day when the embargo of silence is lifted, and their gift allowed its opportunity.

Strangely inconsistent is the conduct of some of the bishops with regard to offending clergy in the matter of incense and lights. It is most difficult to explain their action. While it seems that the bishops intend to manifest their displeasure by not granting licences to the curates of those who have thus offended, it is stated that a late curate of St. Ethelburga's is officiating in the diocese of London, with the bishop's sanction, but without a licence. Another instance is given of a clergyman, who was led to resign his living in the diocese of the Bishop of Bath and Wells for refusing to comply with the bishop's very moderate demands, having been licensed by the Bishop of London as curate in charge of a notorious Romanising church at Kentish Town.

According to the Church Times, Sir Edward Clarke had more scores written against him than his attitude to the war. Our contemporary says :—

> We have good reason for stating that some influential members of the Conservative party in Plymouth resented deeply Sir Edward's unsatisfactory conduct in regard to the Protestant agitation, and have added this charge to the general indictment against their representative. It was always understood in Plymouth that he was a sound Churchman, and it was a grievous disappointment to find him leagued with the narrow clique which calls everyone a traitor who does not pronounce its shibboleth.

No doubt other men are marked in the same way, and when the time for punishing them comes they will either have to suffer or submit. We may have to pass through the old Romish struggle over again, only in another form; it will be by social and political persecution. This trial also will work for our good by calling conscience and courage into play, and by making a sharp distinction between things that differ.

While we deplore and resist the masked Romanism that is struggling for paramountcy at home, it is only just to ourselves and to our cause to remember how Romanism is threatened in some of its old strongholds, and is perishing in America. Protestantism is a very potent and growing influence in Italy, in Austria, in France, and even in Spain it is asserting itself. But if the report made by an old Roman Catholic missionary, who has been to nearly all the parishes in North America, be correct, the condition of Romanism there must be critical in the extreme; for he says that two-thirds of the priests, four or five years after their ordination, lose their faith, and live as hypocrites and immoral men. More than half the students in the seminaries leave before receiving orders, and of those who enter the priesthood fifty per cent. forsake their profession some years afterwards if they can find a good position in business. There may be a backward wave here, but the great tide of the world is away from Rome.

Speaking at a meeting a few days ago, the Bishop of Southwark stated that in the district of Lambeth alone there are over 3,000 one-room homes, each occupied by from two to six people, and the fact is only another illustration of the pressing need there is for such action as that which the local authorities at Stratford intend to take—the erection, at a cost of £162,000, of workmen's dwellings to cover a large extent of ground. Meanwhile, however, there is room for the expenditure of private capital not merely for philanthropic motives, but as a business speculation, the experiment which has been tried upon a very large scale in Dublin having shown that such action in the direction of providing for the better housing of the working-classes can be carried out so as to be beneficial to the tenant and profitable to the landlord.

The art of making money has been expounded in many a text-book of public and private political economy, and it has been still more assiduously practised. The art of how wisely and well to spend money has not received the attention it deserves. This fact gives special weight to the sane and sympathetic words of the Bishop of Durham on this subject at a meeting of the Christian Social Union. He insisted on the necessity of a carefully apportioned plan of expenditure. A well-ordered budget, Dr. Westcott held to be of as vital importance for each citizen as for the nation, and it should be one which no one would shrink from having published. In private expenditure no wants should be recognised which did not express what was required for the cultivation of one's own powers; and the temptation towards artificial wants should be guarded against. The claim on a Christian is at least as great as that on a Jew, who gave one-tenth of his income to the service of God. The question for the future is how practically to affirm the principle that men hold their powers and their possessions equally as a Divine trust.

Mr. Justice Grantham's recent charge to the grand jury at Durham Assizes included a statement full of warning and reproof to those people who look without practical interest upon the Temperance movement. The judge stated that he had to confront the most terrible list of crime which he had ever had to dispose of there, the black calendar being evidently attributable to drink; and he went on to suggest the desirability of dealing more vigorously with public-houses, and of making publicans and liquor dealers feel personally the results of crime due to their traffic. When shall we have an administration composed not of mere politicians pandering to "the trade," but of statesmen who, recognising that no blessing can be attendant upon the revenue from drink, with its accompanying crime and misery, will be bold enough to deal with the question as men who fear God?

Dr. John Watson's earnest plea on behalf of "the old minister" is worthy of very careful consideration on the part of the churches. The difficulty arises inevitably, in the course of time, what ministers are to do in the face of failing energies and waning powers. To be forced to retire without adequate means of support is a cruel alternative to the detriment of the interests of the church by too long a continuance in office. It is impossible for most preachers to make adequate provision for old age. It is, therefore, the duty of the churches to provide means whereby compulsory retirement at a given age should be accompanied by an allowance of not less than half the previous salary. This is the plan in the Civil Service; and the Church, says Dr. Watson, should not fall behind the State in generous treatment of its faithful servants. The subject is one that bristles with difficulties; but it should not be shelved for that reason.

Cannot something be done for the lonely women-workers of London and the great towns? One of them utters a bitter cry in a contemporary on the indescribable loneliness of life under the conditions of a middle-class flat. There is little social touch, she says, among those who work together in the same shop or office or warehouse. It often makes no difference at all if they are members of churches, and herein comes the chief grievance. If Christian families were once to realize the untold good that might be done by kindly friendship for these young people, there would, we are persuaded, be a ready extension of the principle of hospitality which is so frequently inculcated in the New Testament. The misery of friendlessness is one of the worst forms in civilized life, and yet how many thousands suffer from it? Not till those who have homes and friends open the doors of their hearts, will the evil be remedied.

To-day England appears to be permeated with the gambling spirit and the betting mania in a degree never before known. Bets are laid upon incidents of daily life, in which there is no element of competition, but which afford sufficient uncertainty to become the subjects of a game of chance. In other words, gambling is indulged in for its own sake, and not as an indication of interest in something else. It thus becomes increasingly difficult to deal with. The subject is simply incidental, and if one is taken away another is readily found. We fear that this evil is but an indication of a general moral decadence, such as usually accompanies a time of great material prosperity, a condition which calls for more sincere consecration and greater devotion on the part of all those who have taken up the Evangel of the Cross.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

III.—A Doxology.

WE prefer Rotherham's translation of Rom. vi. 17: "But thanks be to God that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient out of the heart unto the mould of teaching, into which ye were delivered;" and Rotherham adds, in a foot-note, "to be fashioned thereby." The Apostle does not thank God for the servitude of sin, under which the saints once groaned; but he thanks God for their obedience to the truth.

The word "tupos," translated "form" or "mould," is worthy of consideration, as it suggests the opposite of what the saints were. Sin was once the mould into which their lives ran; and it moulded them. The word "tupos" is rendered "print," in calling attention to what Thomas said regarding the nail-marks in the body of Christ (John xx. 25). The word is rendered "fashion," in Acts vii. 44; "manner," in Acts xxiii. 25; "figure," in Rom. v. 14; and "pattern," in Heb. viii. 5. In each case there is the thought of following a pattern, being fashioned according to a mould or type. "Tupos" comes from a word meaning "to strike," therefore "a die as struck." It denotes an image deeply engraved, and fitted to reproduce its impress, even as the die moulds the warm wax upon which it is pressed. The truth of God is the die, which moulds and holds the believer. Man's thought about the Word of God is holding and shaping it; but God's thought is the Word holding and shaping him. Thus the truth of Christ's death for our sin, in its practical application, is meant to be a mould into which our lives should run, so that we might die to sin.

Equal Rights for all Men.

IT has become a commonplace to speak of equal rights for the white races in South Africa and elsewhere. Now, the first points of the Convention of 1881 were :— Better treatment of the natives, and equal rights for the white races.

Those were righteous claims. Is it an advance or a retrogression that now we only hear of the equality of the white races? Have the native races no rights? Will the Judge of all the earth have nothing to say about the rights of his coloured subjects in the settlement of South Africa?

We believe that the British Empire is the freest upon earth, and that it governs more fairly than any other nation those under its dominion. But there remains very much to be desired even in its treatment of the native races over which it has asserted and established its predominance.

A German merchant in Cape Town said to us, "We want no other than British rule in this colony. Where Great Britain rules, she treats the peoples alike all round; and what can we want more than that?" Yet in Durban the post-office has two entrances—one for Europeans, the other for natives and Asiatics. Any loafer, so that he be a European, may use the former compartment; but a native, however well conducted, an Asiatic, however cultured, though he might be an Indian rajah, is condemned to use the other.

But this is a small matter compared with the treatment of the Kaffir in the northern republic. We quote the following verse from a poem, written before the present war broke out, by Mrs. Lewis, an elder sister of "Olive Schreiner."

If the dire records in thy Books, O God!
Of wrongs, which have cried up to mighty Heaven
For generations past,
From the enslaved and bruised maltreated lives
Of those who had no voice to make men hear—
The helpless native peoples of this land,
Oppressed and crushed, and treated as brute beasts of burden,
Denied their rights as fellow human beings,
To whom foul wrong could fearlessly be done in light of day,
For law gave feeble hope of justice where the skin was black;
If the mute pleas for succour of their helpless suffering,
Crying up to Thee from slavery's days and onward,
Can answered be by Thee, the Judge of all the earth,
So that the foul dark past shall be atoned for,
The future cleared of further perpetration of such wrong,
Without this awful seething sea of war and bloodshed,
God, grant us peace! If not, "Thy Will be done."

God smote Miriam with leprosy for speaking against Moses because he had married an Ethiopian woman. We have not a word to say in advocacy of inter-marriage, but everything in assertion of the natural human rights of coloured as well as white. To deny them is unrighteousness and tyranny which God will judge.

Equality is one thing, equal rights are another. The franchise is a responsibility which by universal consent must not be accorded without qualification. Minority of age, mental incapacity, misconduct, are universal disqualifications. It is right to withhold the suffrage from unqualified individuals of native races, as of others. But it is not just to withhold any right from any man because he is black or yellow, creole or mulatto, which would be accorded to him if he were white.

Resurrection and the Aaronic Priesthood.—1.

By MR. HENRY VARLEY.

THE persistent effort put forth by Romanists and Ritualists to resuscitate and bring into prominence in England the office and functions of an elaborate priestly system should arrest the attention of all who value true Christian liberty. The attempt either harmonizes with the revealed will of God, or it stands in opposition thereto.

The efforts of the Ritualistic and High Church party pertain to a priestly institution after the type, ritual, and priestly order of the Aaronic institution, assuming a direct relation to the efficacy and application of the sacrifice of our Lord by virtue of the position which they, as priests, maintain they occupy.

There is no foundation for these assertions. It is of the highest importance to remember that our Lord was not in any way identified with the Aaronic Priesthood or sacrifices. He never, in his public ministry, took any part or place in the priestly profession or functions which pertained to the house of Levi. To this house the Aaronic Priesthood was restricted. The Lord Jesus was of the tribe of Judah, concerning which tribe the Apostle says, "Moses spake nothing concerning Priesthood." The Priesthood of Christ Jesus is not, and never was, of the Levitical order. His recognition of the Aaronic priesthood had regard to its temporary position, viz., "Until the seed should come (Christ) to whom the promise was made." The Aaronic institution then became defunct and passed away for ever.

Well did David, as the amanuensis of the Holy Ghost, write of Christ, "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (Ps. cx. 2.) The position, therefore, is this: the Lord Jesus, has, from times eternal, been "the great High Priest over the house of God." How, then, should He join Himself to, or be identified with, a sacrificial system which, so far as Aaron and his sons were concerned, had no existence prior to the year 1491 B.C., and which was instituted in immediate connection with the giving of the Law?

IN THE PURPOSE OF GOD,

In order rightly to understand the doctrine of priesthood we must be guided, not by the reasonings of men, but by the testimony of the Word of God. We turn, therefore, to Genesis (chap. xiv.) which contains the earliest allusion to priestly position. We find it in the person of Melchisedec. He is declared to be "King of Salem and Priest of the Most High God." His position was clearly of Divine appointment. The date given of his official function is shown to be at least 430 years before the Aaronic priesthood had institution. Melchisedec had no recorded genealogy. "Without father, without mother, having neither beginning of days nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually." Such is the testimony of the Holy Ghost in the letter to the Hebrews (vii. 24-29).

No instructed believer can doubt that Melchisedec was the Old Testament representative of "Jesus Christ—the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." His priestly position abideth. The Aaronic Priesthood became necessary in connection with

THE GIVING OF THE LAW ON SINAI.

At that time its institution began. The whole nation of Israel rejected the grace of God, and made deliberate choice of the covenant of law and of works. They placed themselves under condemnation, by reason of their constant transgressions and repeated violation of the terms of that covenant.

It is written, and nothing can alter the fact, that, in relation to law, "Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." The Aaronic institution, with its priesthood and sacrifices, represented the grace and love of God manifested to a people who had voluntarily become parties to "the ministration of condemnation." All the sacrifices offered had (in the mind and purpose of Jehovah) reference to that infinite sacrifice which should be offered once for all when "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Let it be noted that five chapters in Exodus (xx. to xxiv.) suffice for the details of the law given on Sinai, whilst no less than sixteen chapters (xxv. to xl.) are devoted to the details pertaining to priesthood, tabernacle, and sacrifices, all of which pointed at once to Christ's infinite sacrifice. That the Levitical institution was and could only be of a temporary character, the ever-changing priest and constantly repeated sacrifices clearly prove.

The Aaronic priesthood came in with the giving of the law on Sinai. That priesthood, those sacrifices, ritual, dresses and system, all passed away for ever when the Great High Priest, the Lord Jesus Christ, fulfilled that law, bore its curse, and, by his sacrifice for sin, redeemed us from the curse of the violated law (Gal. iii. 13.) In striking contrast to this Aaronic institution stands the

TESTIMONY OF GOD CONCERNING CHRIST,

"Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." (Heb. vii. 17.)

On this ground the Apostle bases his conclusive argument with the Jews. Speaking of the infinite superiority of the Melchisedec priesthood, he affirms the utter incompetency of the Aaronic priesthood, either by their sacrifices or altars, to purge the conscience of the offerer or to take away his sin. He emphatically says, "The law made nothing perfect;" or again, "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sin." The Aaronic institution "stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings—carnal ordinances imposed until the times of reformation."

How grandly the success and glory of the true Melchisedec comes out. Note these words—"But Christ, having come a High Priest of the good things to come, through the greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, not of this creation, nor yet through the blood of goats and calves, but through his own blood—entered in once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption." (Heb. ix. 10-12, R.V.)

Here, then, it is triumphantly proved that an abiding and competent high priest is made known. The Melchisedec priesthood has ever been. It could not, therefore, be annulled or changed by the Aaronic institution. Melchisedec is seen in the high priest's office and position hundreds of years before the Aaronic priesthood had place. On this firm ground, the eternal purpose and counsel of God, Melchisedec has stood, now stands, and will continue to rest. Christ Jesus, the true Melchisedec, having offered one sacrifice for sins, is for ever set down at the right hand of God, "who also maketh intercession for us."

This is written for the instruction of all believers, so that they may never place confidence in any other sacrificial system or human priesthood. Mark the choice words: "But this man (Christ), because He continueth ever, hath an unchanging priesthood. Wherefore He is able to save them to the uttermost (for evermore) that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens."

THE STRENGTH OF THE POSITION

is at this point. The Aaronic priests did not continue by reason of death (Heb. vii. 24-26). The complete exhaustion of the Aaronic system was effected when Christ died. When Christ, by his one infinite offering, had put away sin, then priestly function and position passed away from Aaron and his sons for ever. Into the hands of the risen and abiding "Great High Priest over the house of God," every intention and purpose of the Aaronic institution had now passed. Henceforth priesthood centres in the risen and ascended Lord. Well is it written by the Holy Ghost, for the comfort and instruction of all believers: "We have such an High Priest —in the heavens, a Minister of the holy things, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man."

(To be concluded).

The Bells on the Horses.

Zechariah xiv.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

HOLINESS stands for three things: Separation from sin and unbecomingness, devotion to the service of God, and that growing likeness to Him, which is the necessary consequence of receiving Him as an Almighty Tenant of the heart. For holiness can never be an inherent and personal attribute; it must always be ours in proportion as we are God-possessed and God-filled. They are holiest who have most of God. It is a remarkably vivid portrayal of the distinction of Judaism and Christianity, that the word which, of all others, characterized the exclusiveness and limitations of the old law should be here appropriated to the most ordinary and commonplace of domesticities.

I. We have here first, the Abolition of the Distinction between Sacred and Secular. Some people resemble ships, which are built in water-tight compartments—all their religion is kept carefully apart from the ordinary interests and pursuits of their existence. For instance, they go religiously to their place of worship on Sunday, but would be almost horrified if you were to mention the name of God in their drawing-room or at the dining-table. They might even look at their guest reprovingly, as much as to say, "There is a place and a time for everything, but not here or now." With such, "Holiness to the Lord" is well enough for the High Priest and for the sanctuary, but it has no place on the bells of the horses, or the vessels of household use.

But the New Testament bids us "do all," even eating and drinking, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and for the glory of God (1 Cor. x. 31; Col. iii. 17).

Besides, consider the genius and inner heart of Christianity. (1) It brings us into the possession of a new life. We are Christians, not because we avow a certain creed, or conform to certain outward exercises, but because we have received the life—the Eternal Life—which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us in Jesus. And is it possible to restrict the manifestations of life? Can a flower weave its petals and

EXHALE ITS FRAGRANCE TO ORDER?

Is not God's life always the same in its abundant and infinite variety? So, surely, the life of God in the soul should, and must, express itself in all the out-goings of our existence, in speech, act, movement, equally on the six days as the one day, as much in the kitchen or the shop as the church. If you are possessed of the life of the Holy One, it will as certainly appear as the idiosyncrasy of your character, which underlies, moulds, and fashions your every gesture.

(2) Moreover, Christianity is consecration to Christ. It may be questioned if we have a right to call ourselves Christians unless we regard Him as our Judge, our Lawgiver, and our King, and are deliberately obeying and serving Him. But if we are going to reserve our religion to certain days, places, and actions, we necessarily exclude Him from all that is not contained within the fences we erect. If it be measured by days, we exclude from the government, and therefore the peace, of Christ at least six-sevenths of our time. Dare we suppose that our Master, Christ, will be satisfied with an arrangement which asks Him to accept a part for the whole, a composition for the entire debt?

(3) Then, also, the needs of the world demand an entire and unbroken religious life. The world does not see us in our religious exercises, whether in our private retirement or our public worship. It has no idea, therefore, of the anguish of our penitence, the earnestness of our desires for a righteous and noble life, the persistency of our endeavours. And if we do not give evidence of our religion in our dealings with matters that the men of the world understand, they will naturally and rightly consider that religion is an impractical dream, the child of superstition and emotion. We need to witness to the world where its paths intersect ours, and in regard to matters it can appreciate.

For these reasons we should refuse to maintain the

that are sacred and those that are secular. There are right and wrong things in the world. The wrong ones are, of course, to be fenced out of our lives; but all right ones are sacred. Everything that may be done at all may be done to Christ; and, in being done to Him, is rendered holy. The ostler with his horses, the servant with the vessels of her household service, the clerk with his pen, the mechanic with his tool, the guide with his alpenstock, the artist with his camera, may realize that those mystic words are graven on his forehead and on the instrument of his toil. And each one of us, on entering the workshop of his life, may feel that he is serving God there as much as if he were entering the shrine of some holy temple, or were called to minister at God's altar.

II. There may be the inclusion of many things which once seemed secular, if we can consecrate them to Christ. The Jews were forbidden to own horses. With a tear in his voice the sacred chronicler records it as a sign of Solomon's degeneracy that he brought horses up out of Egypt. Horses were associated with the pride and pomp of kings, and savoured of the arm of flesh; therefore they were prohibited. "Some trust in chariots," said the Psalmist, "and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God." But here they are specially accepted and acknowledged. They are included in the Prophet's anticipation of the blessed future. But notice, Holiness to the Lord is now engraven upon the bells that make sweet music as they move.

What a graphic and significant manner of teaching

ONE OF THE PROFOUNDEST LESSONS!

Judaism, with its special days, places, and men, had its place in the religious training of the race. It was the kindergarten of human childhood; but when we become men, we put away childish things. Probably every life, in its earliest stages, must be fenced and partitioned off from things which, however innocent in themselves, are prejudicial to its development. It was impossible for God to teach men what Holiness meant, save by this process of prohibition, of separation, and of setting apart.

But, when the lesson was fully learnt, the Levitical code was abolished, and Jesus came, saying, "It was said to them of old time . . . but I say unto you." The horses which might not be used, came to be as much in vogue as the bowls of the altar, or the household vessels, and to bear upon their harness the significant sentence that gleamed aforetime on the forehead of Aaron and his sons.

In the Middle Ages certain servants of God feared the sacred relationships of Home, and thought that the babble and prattle of babes, and the love of wife were inimical to their highest interests. But they sadly misread Christ's meaning: they forgot that He sat at Cana's feast; they failed to understand that nothing included in God's original creation could be common and unclean. It is a more excellent and Christ-like way to follow the dictates of nature and of the heart, only with the resolve and purpose that human love should be a chalice full of the Eternal and the Divine, and that, on the most intimate relationships of life, Holiness to the Lord should be inscribed.

SO WITH RECREATION.

Unbend the bow in manly games that develop the sinews and expand the lungs, and join in the pastimes of your age and companions, so long as you can write on bat and football, on lawn-tennis bat and piano, on oar and paddle, on skate and sleigh, the words of the High Priest's frontal, Holiness to the Lord. Whatever you cannot pray over, refuse to touch.

The same rule applies to the enjoyment of nature, of art, of music, of beautiful objects, whether sculptured or carved, photographed or painted. True Holiness does not consist in bare walls, and hard seats, and a dingy environment; but in all that resembles God's work in nature, which is exquisitely beautiful, whether it be the creepers that change to crimson in the autumn, or the enamelling of the rocks, or the tessellated floors of the woodlands, or the silver platines of the stars. Take the horses into the economy of your life, only see to it that the memory of "Holiness to the Lord" recurs to you at every movement of their arching necks.

III. Let us take note that there must be an elevation of all life to the level of our sacred and religious moments. It would be, of course, possible to obliterate the distinction between sacred and secular by treating all as secular; but this would be indeed. The process is not one of levelling-down, but of levelling-up. It is not that the bowls of the altar are to be ejected from their sacred office there, but that common vessels—"every pot in Jerusalem and Judah"—are to be treated with equal regard. It is not that the Sanctuary is to be abolished, but that all other places are to become oratories for prayer and shrines for holy service. It is thus that we are to be able to dwell in the House of the Lord all the days of our life.

We cannot make all time sacred, unless we set apart special hours and days for God. We cannot carry the spirit of pure and undefiled religion among our fellows, unless often we enter into our closet and shut the door and pray unto our Father, who is in secret. "Wherefore forsake not the assembling of yourselves as the manner of some is"—and "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy."

So many bells ring out in our lives. The morning wakening bell, and the school bell; the work-bell for the mechanic, and the shop-bell for the assistant; the visitors' bell on one side of the door, and the tradesmen's on the other; the wedding-bells with their merry peal, and the funeral-bells with their sorrowful monotone; the bicyclist's bell warning the foot-passenger on to the pavement, and the bells on the sleigh-horses, as they draw the vehicle over the frozen snow. To many of these, in times past, we have given a lethargic, listless, and indolent response. We have resented their intrusion on our slumbers and plans. We have chafed against their peremptory summons. But enough of this. Henceforth let us hear in their clangour or chime the call of God to the tasks to which He summons us; let us obey with alacrity, looking to Him for grace and strength to do whatever He would have us do, and realizing that on each the inscription of Aaron's frontal-piece is engraven: "Holiness to the Lord."

Mrs. Jackson's Troubles.

IN a humble cottage, situated in a small country town, a poor mother sat by the fireside, weeping bitterly over her three little children. They, although crouching closely to her, dared not bid her to cease crying, for desolation was upon the home—the angel of death had visited their lonely dwelling, and they were fatherless.

"I must rouse up," thought their mother, "for the children's sake. No one shall say that Hannah Jackson failed in her duty." So, after her husband was laid in the grave, she worked harder than ever, and as she was but the parish authorities sent her a loaf and a shilling a week.

She found, however, that it was no easy matter to keep herself and her three children. Neighbourly help was forthcoming now and then, and kind hearts were interested in the poor widow's sad lot. Yet, little by little, in order to pay the rent, pieces of furniture had to be sent to the town sale rooms. Soon the home was little more than bare apartments, and when the time came that the payments could be kept up no longer, the landlady turned the family into the street.

Mrs. Jackson was at her wits' end, as she sat there upon the kerb-stone with her children. Whither could she turn? There was the workhouse; but, please God, she would not go there, being willing to work her fingers to the bone if she could but find honest employment and keep her children. Why not, then, seek work in the great city of London? In such a huge place there must be plenty to do. Her mind was made up at once. They would tramp to London. The sale of a few things raised her stock of ready-money to eight shillings; and many people, after entering the metropolis with less, had made their way in the world. Besides, there was 'Liza.

'Liza, you must know, was Mrs. Jackson's sister. She had lived in London for years; but she was only a poor woman, working for a very small wage, and in a back street. Nevertheless, she would be, Mrs. Jackson thought, at any rate a reference and an adviser. 'Liza's surprise when her sister and the inevitable three children arrived at her lodging may be imagined. She was sorry for them—very sorry; but what could she do? Her landlady would strongly object to the incoming of four strange people. The other lodgers would not like it, and so on.

"I'll lend you a blanket," said 'Liza, "but I'm afraid that's all I can do." Mrs. Jackson took the blanket with thankfulness, and spent five of her eight shillings in a week's hire of an empty room, where, wrapped in the blanket, the family spent the night. Who can picture the agonies of the poor woman during the next few days? No one, she found, would think of employing a woman who sought work with three children trailing behind her, and in her sorrow there came the bitter temptation—should she make an end of it all in the black swirling water of the Thames?

However, 'Liza had a revelation. "Look here, Hannah," quoth she, "there are two girls work at our place who used to be at them Homes up Victoria Park way."

Mrs. Jackson listened listlessly. "Them Homes" conveyed no meaning to her. "Oh," she replied mechanically, feeling that 'Liza expected her to be interested. "Well," continued 'Liza,

"THAT'S THE PLACE TO HELP YOU.

Take the two little boys there, and see if they'll have 'em. Then, you can keep the girl, and get work and prosper. Take my word for it, and get off to the Homes—Dr. Stephenson's, you know."

Next day found the four wanderers, accordingly, at the Bonner Road Homes. Mrs. Jackson's look, as she glanced appealingly at the committee who were considering cases, was that of a hunted creature. The committee had just decided to accept no more cases at the moment. The great institutions in Bonner Road, the Lancashire Farm, the Princess Alice Orphanage, the Farnboro' Industrial School, the Canadian Home, cost much to maintain; and, as financial supplies were scanty, they dare not undertake further responsibilities. Yet, in such an instance, how could they refuse? No, Mrs. Jackson's two little boys—they were but "tots"—must be taken.

"The committee will let you know when to bring them," was the conclusion.

Mrs. Jackson did not quite understand. "Look here, sirs, if you can't take them, for pity's sake tell me."

"I'll take one myself at once," said Sister Dora Stephenson; "Joey, poor little fellow, shall be mine." And, as another Sister took Jackie, 'Liza's words came true, and Mrs. Jackson was able to get work and live respectably, keeping her little girl with her.

The boys, you must know, are still in the Homes. A short time since Mr. Perks, whom you will have heard of in connection with the big Fund which the Wesleyans are trying to raise for the Lord's work, was at the Victoria Park Chapel, of which Dr. Stephenson is the minister, and where the children from the Homes attend. Mr. Perks, in speaking about the Fund, said he would like to pay for some of the little ones, who had no money, that they might write their names on the great "roll." "Let us have the two youngest," said he; and lo, Joey and Jackie were the ones to sign. You will see, then, that they must be getting on nicely. Yet we may pray that their names may not only be written down upon an earthly roll, but in the Lamb's Book of Life, in the city whose Builder and Maker is God. H.

How We Can Help.

War, horrible war, is raging,
And men are dying—now;
But how can the women help them—
The women of England—how?

Ye women can help by your prayers,
If they are real and true;
They will speed to the God of Mercy,
Who will hear and answer you.

Ye children can help your country:
Be good; thus, give pleasure, not pain;
Comfort the poor bereaved ones
Who mourn the wounded and slain.

Deny yourselves just a little—
A ha'penny now and then—
And give it to the fund which helps
The widows of our men.

So ye women and children, all,
Give as the widow her mite;
And the country will be blessed by you,
And you will be blessed in God's sight.

A "Chalk Talk" for Children.

ONE of the workers at the Gospel meetings which are being held just now in Glasgow is Mr. Van de Venter. He comes from America, where people call him the "Chalk Talker," because, by means of a blackboard and a piece of chalk, he teaches the old truths in such a new and interesting way.

The other day he spoke in a large hall at the "Children's Sabbath Dinner Gathering." There were 2,000 little ones present, and they listened with remarkable attention. Mr. Van de Venter drew some pictures of a big cat. The first drawing showed pussy watching a little bird, which was perched on the branch of a tree above her head. Next came a sad scene, for the cat now held poor birdie in her mouth. In the third picture a wonderful change was shown, for the bird was actually perching between the cat's ears, and was evidently singing, without an atom of fear.

Do you wonder what Mr. Van de Venter taught by these drawings? Well, the first picture, with the cat's evident desire to catch the bird, illustrated sin in the nature. The bird in the cat's mouth showed sin committed, and the cat allowing the bird to sing on her head, without wanting to eat the poor little thing, meant a change of nature.

Some day, added Mr. Van de Venter, in conclusion, cats and birds may really rest peacefully together, "when the wolf shall dwell with the lamb."

Mr. Moody at Kansas.

During a recent visit to Kansas, Mr. D. L. Moody addressed meetings in what is claimed to be the largest hall in the United States—a building having seating capacity for fifteen thousand. Mr. Moody went to work from November 12 to 19; but, apparently, was not in very strong condition when he arrived. The strain of speaking in so large a building to crowded audiences was too much for him. His heart troubled him, and he left for home on Friday, the 17th.

He stood the journey to Northfield splendidly, and remarked that, as a result of the doctor's treatment, he was breathing more freely than he had for five years. The doctors report that there is no valvular affection of the heart. The general condition of the evangelist has since improved, and steady recovery is confidently anticipated. A letter just received says, "Mr. Moody is progressing steadily."

The Late Mr. J. C. Lanphier.—Many of our readers will learn with interest that a tablet is to be erected in the Middle Dutch Church, Second Avenue, New York, to the memory of the late Jeremiah Calvin Lanphier, the well known founder of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting. Communications regarding the undertaking may be addressed to William L. Brower, 170, William Street, New York.

Protestant Federation in India.—Colonel Porcelli, in a recent letter, says: "I have done all that a man in my fettered position can do to arouse Protestant feeling in India, and to form a Protestant league or federation. But, being unable to move from place to place, I cannot exert the necessary personal influence. I appeal, therefore, to your readers to consider this important question, and to see what can be done to depute some fluent speaker to come out this winter and give addresses, form committees, and establish a united testimony against the growing apostasy. The state of affairs in India is alarming. While missionaries have been sleeping, chaplains have been sowing tares; and now many are standing aloof on the plea that they 'exert more influence from outside.' Are missionaries to be content with talking to natives, and seeing their white brethren falling victims to Antichrist's guiles? If so, that is not my view of Christianity."

Schools for Bible Study.

Recovered, happily, from his recent severe indisposition, Rev. Hubert Brooke spoke at Exeter Hall on the 29th inst. on Leviticus. He dealt with the subject under the following heads:

Introduction. — 1. The title is Greek, "relating to the Levites." In Hebrew it is, "And he called." Contains the code regulating the life of the people of God. 2. Is quoted by our Lord as "God's commandment" (Matt. xv. 4; xix. 19; xxii. 39; cp. 2 Cor. vi. 16). Is affirmed to be written by Moses (Matt. viii. 4), and to be part of "the law" (Matt. xii. 4). 3. In time it covers a space of not more than a month, the first month of the second year of the Exodus, and was spoken mainly from the tabernacle immediately after its erection (Ex. xl. 17: Lev. i. 4).

Divisions.—1. Into two parts: (a) how Israel was to approach God, and what was inconsistent with such approach (i.-xvi.); and (b) how Israel, when brought near, was to maintain and exhibit the blessings gained by such nearness (xvii.-xxvii.). Or (a) the manner of access; (b) the holiness resulting. 2. Into sub-divisions: Part i.: (a) Sacrifices (i.-vii.); (b) Priesthood (viii.-x.); (c) worshippers, and lessons of purity and impurity (xi.-xvi.). Part ii.: Holiness: (a) personal (xviii.); (b) family (xviii.); (c) social (xix., xx.); (d) of Priesthood (xxi., xxii.); (e) of sacred seasons (xxiii., xxiv.); (f) of the land (xxv.). Conclusion; of blessings (xxvi.), and freewill offerings (xxvii.).

The Book of the Sanctuary.—1. Lessons on access and worship (Ps. lxv. 4). No other book has so many and so much of God's direct utterances. "And the Lord spake" occurs 36 times. 2. Key-words are: "Offering" and "sacrifice" 125 times; "holy, holiness, sanctify," &c., 131 times; "clean, unclean, purify," &c., 186 times. 3. It is the only book by which the Epistle to the Hebrews is understood: seven chapters in each are connected by quotation or allusion.

Personal Use.—1. There are no more important lessons than those of which Leviticus teaches: access, communion, priesthood, holiness. 2. Communion and holiness are only possible, on the ground of redemption (Ex. v. 1); practical, through the efficacy of the sacrifice and priesthood of Christ (Heb. x. 5-25); permanent, by obedience to the laws of holiness (1 Pet. i. 16). 3. Beware of the mistakes of inverting God's order: Leviticus must follow Genesis and Exodus; worship and communion and holiness cannot precede pardon and redemption, but must follow them. An unpardoned rebel cannot have access to his King in favour. 4. Neither deny the possibility of holiness, neglect the provision for it, nor assert the completion of it, (2 Cor. vii. 1).

Rev. G. Soltau's Lectures.

In a recent address on the Gospel of St. John, Rev. G. Soltau dealt with the subject as follows:—

St. John's Gospel. It gives the portrait of Jesus as the Son of God, combining the features of the other Gospels, and adding special features to be noted. The key verse is xx. 31. The divisions are as follows:—i. 1-18, introduction; i. 19-xii. 50, the revelation of Himself to the world; xiii.-xx., the revelation of Himself to the disciples before and after the crucifixion; xxi., the appendix. Sub-divisions of second division:—i. 19-ii. 12, the testimony; ii. 13-iii. 36, the work amongst Jews; iv. 1-42, amongst Samaritans; iv. 43-54, amongst Galileans; v.-xi, mixed multitudes; xii., closing words. The key words are "Father," "sent," "world," "light," "life," "witness," "believe," "verily, verily." The central fact is that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God, the Messiah of the Jewish nation. His position and claims stirred the nation's animosity. Note the frequent use of the expression, "the Jews," always in a hostile sense. The following lines of study may be traced:—"The Messiahship," admitted by John the Baptist, Andrew, Philip, Nathanael, the woman of Samaria, Simon Peter; the "I am" statements by the Lord, as the Jehovistic title, thus identifying Himself with the Old Testament "I am;" "The Lamb of God," taken in connection with seven prominent uses of the lamb in sacrifice, in Exodus and Leviticus; the statements commencing with "Verily, verily," and their especial force; and "the Sent One" given by God, sent to save, filled with the Spirit, entirely surrendered in heart, will, word, and work, sending out the disciples as He Himself was sent out by the Father. Other lines to be traced are: the world, the sphere of his work and power, the personal interviews, and how the Lord dealt in conversation with the different states of mind leading to the acceptance of life eternal.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 19.

The riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory (Col. i. 27).

Let us call in the help of an allegory to aid in the understanding of these marvellous words, remembering that mystery used by St. Paul always means some hidden thing, the clue to which has been communicated to him, and through him to us all. There are, by-the-by, eight mysteries of which the New Testament speaks.

We will suppose that in some sea-port town the son of a widow, on whom she leans for support, suddenly breaks away from her humble home and makes for the sea. For long years he is absent from her; her frame is bent; her hair becomes snow-white as she toils with her own hands for her livelihood. The neighbours pity her; hope dies within her soul, for, as time goes on, she thinks he must have died. One day, however, a sunburnt sailor comes to her home, and asks if she can give him lodging and board. They strike the bargain together, and for some days he is the inmate of the house; but she has no idea who he is, she has no knowledge of his past history, she is only conscious that her heart somehow beats more quickly when he is there, and that a curious light has arisen in her life, which is all the brighter when his foot is on the stair, or his cheery voice heard through the house. That is a mystery—the identity of the man is hidden.

One day, as they sit at a common meal, he makes a gesture, speaks in a certain tone. She looks steadfastly into his face, presently arises, rushes towards him, casts her aged arms around his neck, covers him with kisses and cries, between laughing and weeping, "Why you are Tom, my long-lost boy." He breaks into a merry laugh, and says, "Why, mother, what ails you, that you have been so long in discovering me?" That recognition, those smiles, that gladness, are the glory of the mystery.

Then he turns to her and says, "Mother, how old and thin you are, how white your hair and thin your hands! What has made you like this?" "Ah!" she says, "my boy, I have had to work to keep the roof above me;" and he answers, "Well, mother, I am going to make a lady of you, you shall never work as you have done," and putting his hand into his pocket he draws out a handful of gold, throws it on the table, and says, "That is to start with, and I have plenty more. I have come into a great sum of money, and you shall live in a comfortable villa, and have servants to wait on you, and shall want for nothing." And that moment she knows that he has come to relieve her, for all after time, from the pressure of poverty—that is the riches of the glory of the mystery.

The meaning of the parable is clear. Jesus came into your heart as a comparative stranger. He glided in as softly as the dawn breaks over the hills. You had no idea what you received at the moment when you opened the door to Him, or when He came in through the unopened door. But Jesus Christ has become the literal inmate of your soul, and He has brought with Him his unsearchable riches of patience, gentleness, peace, strength. Whatever you are deficient in is his by native right. What you cannot do He can do. You are rich beyond the dreams of avarice, only make use of your union with the Son of God. Let Him do for you as for Peter, when He said of the shekel which they had found in the fish's mouth, "This shall be for Me and thee" (Matt. xvii. 27).

Special Christmas Mission Supplement.

AN EXCEEDING TRIAL.

Our New Home of Rest for Men.

£650 required by Christmas to prevent our having to yield possession.

These premises are situated on the South Coast, in the pleasant sea-side village of Lancing, two miles from Worthing. They are in excellent repair, and contain about 20 Good Rooms, affording ample accommodation for 30 Men, beside the resident staff. The Grounds are 2½ acres in extent.

We have, to the great comfort and help of many invalided and broken-down men seeking a renewal of health and strength, enjoyed possession of these desirable premises for some six months past, in the hope of finding ourselves able to purchase. But we regret to say that unless £650 further is forthcoming by Christmas, we shall have to yield possession and lose the opportunity, as the owner of adjacent property has made proposals for acquiring same, hence an extension of time cannot be counted upon. Your kind interest and assistance would therefore be greatly valued just now.

The property, when purchased, will be placed in the hands of responsible Trustees, as was done in the case of the existing larger Home at Lancing for Women and Children, of whom Mr. F. A. BEVAN, J.P., D.L., is the principal Trustee. A Gospel Hall is attached to the Homes.

Contributions to secure the above most eligible premises would be most thankfully received by Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Princes Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or by the Editor of The Christian, or the Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., J.P., D.L., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Secretary of the Homes: Mr. WILLIAM CHORLEY, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, London, N.

Contributions may also be paid through the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Limited, 54, Lombard Street, E.C. Further information will be gladly sent to any enquirer, together with list of Trustees, Council, Auditors, &c.

The premises at Lancing are known as "Channel View." Visitors are invited at any time.

(Otherwise known as "DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES").

Over 5,000 Orphan or Waif Children are now in the Homes. Among these Children there are 734 LITTLE INCURABLES, Deaf and Dumb, Blind, Crippled or otherwise Afflicted Children. EIGHT SOULS are added every 24 hours to this Great Family.

38,767 Waifs have already been rescued by the Homes. Of these 10,660 trained Boys and Girls have been successfully placed out in the Colonies, and more than 22,000 sent to Sea or placed in Situations in Great Britain, &c.

Some conception of the extent of the work may be formed from the fact that during the last Two Years no fewer than 4,655 Fresh Cases have been admitted—a number probably in excess of admissions by all other existing Societies put together.

No really Destitute Child has ever been refused admission.

The Doors are open to the Homeless FREELY, Day and Night, all the year round. No eligible case is rejected on the ground of age, sex, creed, nationality, or physical condition.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

FOR ninety-two years the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society has been enabled to minister to the needs of God's aged poor throughout the United Kingdom. The institution originated in that revival of the spiritual life of the Church which, under the Divine blessing, resulted from the preaching of George Whitefield and other eminent ministers of Christ. Its founders were members of Whitefield's Tabernacle, Moorfields, and from the day of the issue of their first address to the present time, the Society has carried on its undenominational work. Its methods have been tried and proved, and in a simple, safe, and easy way it provides help for life for all its pensioners, and also homes for such of the recipients as need them, the committee striving to do, as a speaker at a recent public meeting expressed, "the maximum of good at the minimum of cost." Every effort is made, consistent with efficiency, to keep down working expenses.

What sight can be more pathetic than that which many a pensioner of this Society presents. A fellow-believer dwelling in solitude; poverty has overwhelmed the home; bit by bit the comforts have gone; one by one the treasured little possessions have been parted with, and the want grows more urgent; then God sends his help by the hand of this Society. At the present time no fewer than living in all parts of the country, are upon the books receiving upwards of £11,000 per annum in pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. The greater number of these aged ones would, but for the Society, be closing their pilgrimage in the workhouse; now they are enabled to remain in their own homes and in the midst of family circles, where the influence of Christian old age cannot but be a great blessing. The majority of the pensioners are over seventy years of age, and many are upwards of eighty. In the four homes 180 of the recipients dwell, and every effort is made for their comfort. These buildings, with funds for providing coals and ministry to the sick, cost £2,000 per annum.

A daily income of £36 is therefore needed to maintain the present operations of the institution, and to meet this amount the ordinary receipts are insufficient. The pensions in London and some other places are paid monthly, and in the country districts quarterly; and, wherever possible, through the personal visits of Christian friends. A bond of sympathy is thus established between donors and receivers, and the work of the institution is divested of coldness and formality. Visitors to the homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton will be heartily welcomed.

Every candidate has to be nominated by qualified subscribers, and careful inquiry is made into each case, the three conditions of eligibility being old age, poverty, and discipleship. The committee desire to act in the spirit of the words of Dr. Chalmers:—"For the purpose of doing aught like something more is necessary than to compassionate the poor; we must also consider them."

A considerable number of the recipients have been reduced from positions of comparative comfort and affluence. Many more have been comprised in the industrial classes; and all have to tell the pitiful story of the long struggle, with failing strength, to obtain daily bread in the face of intermittent employment and abounding competition.

One pensioner, aged seventy-two, a widow, has to support herself and an entirely helpless invalid daughter, on 7s. 4d. weekly. Another is a native of Armenia, and, though quite blind, she keeps her room clean and cooks for herself. A third pensioner recently passed away, after being bedridden forty-eight years; she was a happy and contented Christian. Instances such as these could easily be multiplied; but, perhaps, enough has been said to show the urgency of the needs that have to be met.

Those desirous of interesting themselves in this extensive and well-tried work for the poor and the aged of "the household of faith" will be thankfully welcomed by the secretary, Mr. John E. Hazelton, at the office, 83, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Crippled Street Children.

ONE of the most pathetic and Christlike branches of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission is surely that which deals with those afflicted girls who are found in our markets and streets selling flowers. The pitiable condition of these children awakens all the sympathies of our nature, and we cannot withhold the gift so pitifully asked for. Yet there is the fear lest the gift has been a salve to our conscience, or that it may be spent to gratify the selfish indulgence of some unnatural guardian; but what can we do? We must help them, for they may not be left in their misery wandering the streets uncared-for, their life of pain

AGGRAVATED BY POVERTY AND NEGLECT.

Exposed to the bitter cold, ill-clad, ill-fed, often ill-treated, their life is a bitter burden.

Surely something can be done to brighten their lives and infuse them with hope? While they are young children at home, even in their slum dwellings, they can be, and are, regularly visited; picture books, toys, food, warm clothing are given them, and their attendance arranged at Christmas treats, at tea parties for cripples, and at the summer fortnight at the seaside. Nevertheless, when all this is done, and it is done most efficiently and tenderly, yet practically they are left in the same state of hopeless helplessness. When they cease to be children, and the serious problem of life oppresses them, what are they to do? Must they drift to the workhouse, or always depend upon charity? The able-bodied ones are rescued, received, and trained for domestic service; but such an honourable position is not possible for the afflicted and crippled. They need and deserve our best help, and if such girls can be saved and taught to earn their own livelihood, and attain to the blessings of self-dependence, all work to that end is worthy the devotion and support of God's people.

There are now fifty-two being cared for by the Crippled Girls' Industrial Training Branch of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission. They are received for two years, and are taught the art of artificial flower-making, mounting, and designing.

A visit to the Mission head-quarters is highly interesting. Here we see the inmates busily engaged at work, under circumstances which are full of

HELP AND ENCOURAGEMENT.

Of course, we are all made familiar with the skill of these artificers by seeing the finished products adorning ladies' head-gear. The imitation flowers almost outvie the real article in beauty of form and brilliance of colour, and the excellence of the work constitutes a strong testimony to the grateful energy of the girls; and we watch with keen interest how the deft and skilful fingers of the workers piece together the petals of a rose or the parts of some other flower, previously shaped and tinted by other hands. It is dainty and fascinating work, and its variety at once serves to develop the intelligence of the girls, and to give scope for any special talent for tasteful construction they may possess.

At the expiration of the period of training they are happily capable of earning their own living. Then they are boarded out with good Christian foster-parents, work is provided for them, and they defray the cost of their board and lodging. Thus, there is a continuous stream of inmates passing through the institution. It is impossible to enumerate all the advantages of this work. It effectually removes a girl from the

and from her slum surroundings. The influence of a Christian home and genial company, and of light, pretty, and interesting work, inspires them with hopefulness. As the possibility of becoming self-dependent dawns upon them, the whole outlook brightens. Many of them have given the clearest evidence, too, of having become true Christians.

For over twenty years this branch of the work (the Mission was founded in 1866, and owes its existence to the late Earl of Shaftesbury) has continued its work with manifest token of Divine blessing. This work of rescuing and training the poor crippled girls to a life of useful, remunerative labour is earnestly commended to the prayerful consideration of God's people. Its claims are urgent and real; the work is a solution of the problem of how to help the helpless to help themselves. The story of this Mission's thirty-three years' work among the poorest of London's street poor, and the devoted labour of Lord Shaftesbury for their benefit, will be gladly sent upon application to the secretary, Mr. J. A. Groom, 8, Sekforde Street, E.C.

Sleep Not.

1. Thess. v. 6.

SLEEP not, O child of God,
The world is fast asleep;
But thou must be awake,
And constant vigil keep.
Amid the darkness of the night
Hold thou aloft the Gospel light.

Sleep not, but watchful be;
Though dark the night and long
The morning cometh soon,
And with it gladsome song.
The "Morning Star" shall soon appear
Proclaiming that the day is near.

Sleep not, the night is spent,
And Christ is at the door;
Thy long and patient watch
Shall then for aye be o'er;
And thou among the blood-cleansed throng
Shalt sing redemption's peerless song.

Sleep not, O Christless soul,
For thee the Saviour waits;
And holds his judgments back,
But opens mercy's gates.
Arise and come; He calleth thee
The ransomed of his blood to be.

Work for Workless Men.—A meeting in connection with the James Keates Homes for workless men was held a few days ago, on the premises, at 321, City Road, N. A number of Christian workers, representing various denominations, gave stirring and pathetic accounts of the work. Quite a number of men have been reclaimed from almost incredible degradation. They are now clothed, and in their right minds, walking humbly with God. All have not fallen so low, but they have been in urgent need. Employers testify in cordial terms as to the conscientiousness and success with which the men toil. Mrs. Keates, who carries on the Homes, will be glad to hear from firms requiring men for clerical, advertising, or other work. Address as above.

The Genesis of a Great Love-Gift.

By Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

EVER since I had met my first Arab, little James Jarvis, I had, at intervals, been searching the slums of London by night, and had here and there drawn out one and another homeless child from the wretched lairs in which I found them. I did my best for those who were willing that I should help them.

Little James himself, my first boy, was put with a good woman some two streets away from where my own lodgings were. Gradually other boys, rescued in a similar way from starvation, were also placed out by me ("boarded out" we would call it to-day) in lodgings here and there. They were sent to the nearest common school.

Of course, they had to be cleansed and kept clean. They were clad in decent but poor clothing; a few of my own personal friends, who were interested, assisted me in bearing the expense, which would have been too great for me to bear alone. Some of my fellow-students at the London Hospital also gave me bundles of their cast-off clothing, and these were worked up for the sake of my waifs.

When the incident I am about to relate occurred, I had, probably, some fifteen or sixteen children who were dependent upon me and my friends, and who were living in the way I have described. What was to become of them in the future I had not yet settled. I had not even raised the question in my thoughts, save that I was sure some door of hope would open! I know I prayed for guidance daily, and took every little help that came as God's answer.

I remember that I got two or three who were older than the others into doing odd jobs for some tradesmen in the neighbourhood, and this gave me great satisfaction at the time. Thus, although I did not know what I should do with them all in days to come, I had not the slightest doubt but that I had been right in the steps I had already taken on their behalf; and that my Heavenly Father would, in his own good time and way, make all that then looked doubtful perfectly clear.

More and more, however, I began to ponder in my own mind upon the dreadful and pathetic condition and fate of the Waif Children revealed to me by those who were to be found in such numbers, with whom I conversed nightly. I remember how I prayed daily—I had almost said hourly—that God would raise up some powerful friends to succour and help these little ones who had won my heart; yet it never then occurred to me that the task would one day be my own.

FRIENDLESS AND ALONE IN LONDON,

But my thoughts began more and more to concentrate round Waif Children, and round the Waif Children of the East End. As yet no public notice of any sort had been drawn to my work; and, indeed, I had no desire that it should be. In fact, I shrank with great reluctance from taking any step which would bring me into the public gaze.

Nor did it seem that I had anything very great to record. I had simply done my duty. I had helped a few poor street children, whom I had discovered to be absolutely homeless and friendless. It was a great privilege, I felt, to be allowed to have any practical share in such work for the Lord. That it was Christian work, I never doubted. I often spent hours in talking to my waifs about the Saviour, and many a stirring memory comes back to me to-day as I recall the quiet moments when the whole group of children I had lodging round me came to my own rooms; and as they sat, some on seats, others on the floor, they would listen with wondering eyes to the stories I told them which illustrated and set forth the great love of Jesus.

We never separated without prayer, and it was evident my little audience understood that I, at least, loved each one of them, and wanted to do them good. Perhaps they did not understand more than that, although I know that, of that early group, some soon gave evidence that they had given their own selves unto the Lord. That was just what I aimed at. It was to be all Christian work—winning souls for Christ; and all else I did, such as feeding their bodies and cleansing them, and clothing them and supplying their physical wants, were merely means towards an end. That great end was their redemption, body and soul, from evil to the service of my Master.

It happened that one day, at this time, a great Missionary Conference was held at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. I cannot fix the exact date of this; and although I have consulted Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, who convened the meeting, and who occupied the chair, he, like myself, is unable to be exact. I think, however, that it was early in 1867 when that meeting occurred. I, as a missionary student, received an invitation to attend it. There was a crowded and most enthusiastic audience. Several gentlemen from various parts of the world addressed it; but two or three well-known speakers who expected to be present were prevented from appearing, and they sent word only at the last moment. Thus, late in the evening, the chairman found himself in some difficulty owing to this dearth of speakers. Suddenly he turned to me, as I sat near him on the platform, and said:

"BARNARDO, YOU MUST SAY A FEW WORDS. Tell us something of your ragged-school in the East of London."

I am free to confess that I do not think I ever felt so unhappy in my life as at that moment! I could not, I thought, have spoken a word to save my life. I had never before addressed a formal audience like this, only little groups of poor folk in the East End, and the children gathered in the shed, or in my room. So I promptly declined the invitation. No; I could not. "Oh!" he said, "you must." And, without a pause, he turned to the audience, and said, "So-and-so cannot be here; but we have a young medical student living in the East End of London, who is by-and-by to go to China, and he will tell us something of his Ragged School work." There was nothing for it but to obey! Looking up to God for guidance and mentally beseeching his help, I stood for a moment feeling dazed in front of that great audience; and then, closing my eyes in the effort to forget where I was, and to concentrate my mind on the subject, I began to say something, at first I hardly knew what, about my Ragged Night School. Gradually, however, I became warmed to the subject. I remember that I could not help revealing what I had seen the previous night in of the East End. I had found myself there in the early morning surrounded by a group of the most pitiable children one could imagine—homeless and friendless, foodless, and clad only in rags. And I dwelt on the pity of it, and the sorrow of the fact that no one seemed to care for either the bodies or the souls of these poor outcasts. Then I dwelt upon the heathen darkness in which they lived, and I besought my hearers to pray for the little waif children of the great city in which we were gathered.

I think I can say that my story seemed to impress the audience a great deal. They exhibited their feelings, after I had sat down, in a manner which was very encouraging to me. When the meeting was brought to a conclusion, I was leaving the platform, and had just reached the arena, when a young woman came up to me. She looked of the servant-girl class. I remember that she had a good and simple face, and that her eyes were filled with sympathy. "Please, sir," she said, "may I speak to you?" I said, "Certainly." She went on: "I came here to help the missionaries. I have been praying for them for years. I am only a servant, and I cannot give much; but I have for them. But, sir," she continued, "when I heard you, I thought that we had the heathen not only abroad, but here, at our very doors; and I wondered if you would let me give this which I had brought for the heathen to your poor children." And in a moment, before I could reply, she had placed in my hands, wrapped up in paper what was clearly a parcel of coins. I felt not a little embarrassed, and I knew not how to act.

This was the FIRST PUBLIC MONEY I HAD EVER RECEIVED. I know I felt myself getting red and hot all over! The questions rose in my mind: "Could I take it? Was it right? What should I do?" It seemed ungracious to refuse the gift, yet I was in a very embarrassing position. Hitherto all expenses had been paid either by my two or three fellow-students and myself, or by a few of my private friends (I had not many, and, of course, to them I accounted for what I did with their money). But this was quite different, being a gift from a stranger, a member of the public. So I had the little parcel in my hand, and thanked her in some awkward fashion. I know that I felt as awkward in receiving it as she apparently did in giving!

When at last I reached home, I opened the packet, and found that it contained 6¾d. in farthings! I knew not what to do or what to think with regard to this first gift. Presently, however, it came home to me that I had been asking God for guidance and help, and that this was His way of giving both. Here was a small gift, a humble one, and from a humble person. But it might be

THE SEED OF A GREAT DEAL!

So I reverently wrapped the coins in paper and laid them in a drawer, where they remained some time. It was the first contribution I had ever had from the public; yet I have never doubted since then that this was God's way of showing me that He could, by humble and unexpected instruments, supply all that would be needed for any work which He gave me to do for Him.

Surely it is not amiss here to remind myself and my readers that that first gift has been followed in succeeding years by generous offerings for the same work from God's people all the world over, amounting, up to Nov. 30, 1899, to the great sum of £2,258,911. And is it not touching to reflect that the larger proportion of this immense love-gift to Christ's Little Ones came from the generous hearts of the humble and the lowly, in amounts of less individual value than £1 each?

Important to Borrowers!

BEING a large capitalist in the way of Boys, I am prepared to negotiate for Christmas Loans with 400 households! I expect a large number of eager borrowers, for this is an opportunity seldom available. All my boys are excellent boys, smart boys, paragons of boys (except a few who are not! Small type, please, Mr. Printer!) And they will be an acquisition to any household. They will be delivered at any railway station, say, within ten or fifteen miles of London; and they must be returned in good order, and not damaged by Christmas over-feeding, within a day or two! Now, who applies?

Joking apart, it is a serious matter for us to provide Christmas fare and Christmas treats to all our young people. Moreover, we long to give each boy a real change at Christmas. We are, therefore, asking our friends within a reasonable distance (say ten or fifteen miles) of London to invite our boys to spend their Christmas in their own households. But we must also ask each friend who volunteers to aid in this matter to send us the return railway fare for their boy guest. Our purse is so very low!

We will send only nice boys, either a little cripple or a well-behaved little fellow between, say, six and fourteen years of age. Such an outing will make Christmas bright for the youngster, and Christian friends will be interested, I am sure, in their young visitor, who may have had, perhaps, very few glimpses in the past into homes of happiness and comfort.

The boys will be ready to go from Friday afternoon, the 22nd, to Wednesday forenoon, the 27th December. They will bring all personal requirements with them for the five nights' stay; and I hope and believe that they will prove themselves thoroughly repectable, well-behaved and gentlemanly little visitors.

If any reader of THE CHRISTIAN wants a guest, please let me hear on or before December 19.

"Gather them into the Fold."

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

IT was of the children that the Master said, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." And, in consequence, the early Church bestowed special care upon the little ones who, in that age, were often cruelly treated, despised, deserted, or forsaken by parents and guardians. The pages of history reveal the fact that regard for child-life has everywhere increased in proportion to the knowledge of the teaching and principles of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the annals of the present century it will be found that of the vast numbers of devoted workers for God whose names are recorded in this connection, that of the noble Earl of Shaftesbury stands out as the Peer among them all. He championed the cause of the children in various ways, and ever sought to save from perishing the "little ones" who were dear to the heart of the Father, and for whom the Saviour died. And the institution which bears the name of the Children's Earl—and of which his lordship was the first president—the Ragged School Union, has, during the fifty-five years of its existence, had for its object the rescue and the training of the waifs and despised little ones of the great metropolis and its suburbs.

To "gather them into the fold" is the motto of each of the 4,000 workers in the various Missions affiliated with the Ragged School Union. Their efforts are firstly, and mainly, in a spiritual direction; the love of God is ever their theme. These Missions are substantially aided from the funds of the Society—about £2,000 being annually disbursed in money grants alone, to support needy and struggling efforts, and to help in the erection of suitable mission buildings.

The educational branches of this Society have also been productive of untold good. Day and week-night schools, kindergarten teaching imparted to cripples in their own homes, industrial classes and school libraries, are all comprised in the multifarious agencies of the Ragged School Union.

The philanthropic enterprises of the institution are many and diverse. The amount expended annually in nourishing food and free meals for very poor children forms a considerable item. The garments supplied to the naked, and boots to the shoeless—for which a nominal charge is usually made, or a method of supply on loan—are to be counted by tens of thousands; while the benefit derived from the country and seaside holidays afforded to the thousands of children, at a trifling cost, is incalculable, and the "day in the country," enjoyed by the tens of thousands of children, is looked upon as a

RED-LETTER DAY IN THEIR EXPERIENCE.

Besides these numerous agencies on behalf of the children, various efforts are in operation for the spiritual and temporal welfare of adults and the following enterprises are wholly sustained by the Society:—The Battersea Gipsies' Rest, the Crutch and Kindness League, the Hearts and Hands League, and the Guild of the Good Samaritan. Full particulars of each will be gladly forwarded by the secretary.

The work conducted by the Ragged School Union among the cripples of greater London, requires special mention. The names and addresses of over 5,000 crippled children—many of them helpless sufferers—are registered. These are regularly visited by Christian ladies and gentlemen, and in many cases corresponded with regularly by members of Christian Endeavour societies. Cripples' Parlours are held weekly in various districts, when games are indulged in, and the afflicted ones are brought in touch with the Gospel. Many again are helped to secure surgical appliances, crutches, &c.; and over a thousand little sufferers have, during the past year alone, spent a holiday of two or more weeks in the seaside homes of the institution.

It is obvious that the various operations of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society, conducted in the metropolis of the world, are far-reaching in their influence, and, therefore, claim the sympathy and practical support of the Lord's stewards throughout the empire. Financial aid is immediately required, for the winter's work has commenced in earnest in all the affiliated schools and missions, and the demands upon the resources of the Society are enormous. We need not do more than point out that while money is pouring in for the relief of distress caused by the deplorable war in the Transvaal, it is imperative that such an institution should be adequately supplied with funds to carry on its beneficent work at home; otherwise the invasion made by the adversary of God and man upon the hearts and lives and homes of the poor around us may be far more lamentable than that caused by the invasion of our colonies. The secretary is Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

To Meet Romish Aggression.

THE Protestant Alliance is the only undenominational Protestant society for definite and distinctive Protestant work in the country.

After the Papal aggression, in the year 1850, it was felt by the late Lord Shaftesbury that a society was needed to include upon its platform members of all Protestant churches, not only to oppose the advance of Popery, but to maintain the Scriptural principles of the Reformation.

The eminent statesman accomplished his purpose, and he became the first President of the Protestant Alliance, which was founded in the year 1851. From that time to the present day the Council of the Alliance has been sufficiently wide to include representatives of almost every phase of thought and feeling among Protestants. The Council for the present year is a very representative one, and a glance at the names will show them to be typical of the best traditions of British Protestantism. Amongst those belonging to the Church of England are such veterans as the Bishop of Liverpool, Archdeacon Taylor, Canon Christopher, Canon Garratt, and Prebendary Webb-Peploe; whilst of those eminent in the records of English Nonconformity there are Revs. Richard Roberts, Darlow Serjeant, Dr. Kennedy Moore, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, and W. Sinden.

As we have named the first president, we may perhaps be expected to say something of the first meeting. It was attended by the Earl of Ducie, the Earl of Roden, the Earl of Cavan, Lord Mandeville, M.P., Lord Morton, Lord Henry Cholmondeley, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, and other gentlemen who were eminently representative of the Protestantism of the nation. But, wide as this representation was and is intended to be, the objects and principles of the Alliance are defined with the utmost clearness and distinctness.

Briefly stated, those principles are:—

(1) The One Book, the Bible only.

(2) The One Priest only, the Lord Jesus Christ.

(3) The one and only sacrifice "finished" on the cross.

Through evil and through good report, during many years of patient labour, in the midst of coldness, discouragement, and of many and varied obstacles, these principles have been faithfully upheld.

Not the least important and interesting part of its work is the extensive circulation of an illustrated monthly Protestant paper. There is no other paper exactly like this. In the first place, it serves as the report of the work of the Society. The great cost of a report in the form of a pamphlet, which very few read thoroughly, is avoided, for the work of the month is reported in "The Protestant Alliance Official Organ," and is sent to all the members from the central office post free. The paper was enlarged to its present quarto size at the beginning of last year, under the then editorship of Rev. W. Kennedy Moore, D.D.

A very considerable space is given for articles on the sayings and doings of Roman Catholics, and also of Romanizers in the Church of England. Such matters are critically considered and discussed with great ability, and always in good taste. Above all, the unscriptural character of the Romish sacerdotal system is pointed out, and in a kindly Christian tone. The members of the Alliance, we are informed, greatly appreciate their monthly paper, which forms a very handsome volume. We are informed that the volume, containing a copy of each issue for the year 1899, is now ready, and may be obtained, on application to the secretary, for 1s. 6d., post free. It contains an which have been controversially treated, and we advise our readers to secure a copy.

The vigour of the Protestant Alliance is also seen in the creation and extension of auxiliary branches throughout the century. Since the annual meeting of May, 1898, new auxiliary branches have been established at the following places:—Brondesbury, Chelsea, Dover, Hackney, Hyde Park and Kensington, Norwich, Paddington and Notting Hill, West Kirby (Lancs.), Sittingbourne, St. John's Wood, and Weymouth.

Progress has been made not merely in the extension of old, and in the formation of new branches, but all along the line. Evangelistic meetings in the open air all through the summer months; controversial and educational lectures in public halls during the winter; and the electoral work carried on by the Alliance are of the greatest importance; and if it had not been for such continuous and faithful labours the Papal aggression would probably have had a much stronger footing in this country. The enemy is indeed coming in "like a flood," as is proved by statistics given in the February issue of the "Organ" of this Society; but the workers are undaunted, and quietly and unobtrusively pursue their way, ever seeking to obtain fresh power for the conflict—where alone it can be obtained—at the Throne of Grace. Accordingly, from May 7 to May 13 last, was held a brief period of united and universal intercessory prayer, specially organized by the Protestant Alliance, "for the direct interposition of Almighty God on behalf of our beloved country, and to implore the Divine blessing upon all Protestant work." The secretary is Mr. S. W. Brett, and the offices are at 430, Strand, W.C.

December Night.

DECEMBER NIGHT. The drifting snow was sweeping
In smothering clouds, and earth appeared a blot;
The fatal sleep into his heart was creeping:
"Where is my path? where is my own dear cot?
Lost! lost!" the wanderer moaned, when, lo, a door!
"My home!" he cried; "now let the tempest roar!"
Night in the soul. The world had been my heaven;
But it had failed, and earth and sky were black:
Lost in the desert, by the tempest driven.
"Oh, for the light," I cried, "to guide me back!"
Then Jesus answered me: "I AM the Way."
I trusted Him, and night was turned to day.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The annual report of the work in connection with the Circus services at Newcastle-on-Tyne, speaks of continued blessing. At the meetings in the Palace Theatre the attendances have been large, the attention and behaviour of the audiences excellent, and the number professing faith in Christ most encouraging. It is satisfactory to find that so many young men and women are brought under the sound of the Gospel. Every week 10,000 tickets are issued, advertising the meetings. On these is printed some striking passage of Scripture, and blessing has been received by this means. The services go to show how non-churchgoers can be reached by the Gospel; and that, when the simple truth is presented by consecrated speakers, the people gladly come to listen; and that, best of all, many who hear, believe and live. Communications may be addressed to Mr. James Marchbank, 31, Grove Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

A Modern "Bethesda."

THE LIBERATOR RELIEF FUND.

THE "day of trouble" had dawned. When the shadows of death crept round the home, and the happy, easy-going circle was ruthlessly broken, the stunned ones who were left behind could do naught but gaze, with heart-breaking eyes, at the close-clanged door that shut out the other world from this work-a-day one, the future from the present.

He who, but a few hours since, had passed through that door had been the head and hands alike of the suddenly bereaved family, a brave soldier, a ruler accustomed to be obeyed unquestioningly in and out of his home. The pillar of the house gone, and with him his half-pay gone also, what could follow but the falling to earth of the happy little home like an edifice of cards?

The fragile, broken-spirited mother, accustomed to be cared for as a queen, and shielded from every rough wind the world blows, hot or cold, must perforce rise up and face life for the first time alone without her husband.

The daughter, brought up aimlessly, had now brought home to her, in full force, the deplorable result in her utter incapacity.

When the helpless pair tore away their wistful gaze from the impenetrable door Death had shut to, it was to sit down and count, with fear and dismay, their little all. What were they to do with the precious hoard—how spin its narrow limits out? It was all that stood between themselves and dire beggary. To put it in a bank they were terrified, for banks might and did fail.

After weeks of frightened deliberation they were told, for the first time, of a great institution, conducted on strictly Christian principles by men of peerless integrity and unquestioned piety—the famous "Liberator"—in after days to be branded as the "infamous Liberator"!

It was as if an angel pointed the way to this philanthropic company, whose end and aim were to protect the widow and the orphan.

With a meek and reverent thankfulness for the guiding hand, the larger portion of their means—£500—was placed in happy confidence in the care of such a religiously-conducted institution, and the annual percentage procured a modest new home for the two. Frugally, sparely, they struggled on, keeping life together by means of the daily-diminishing remainder of their all. But, to buoy them up, there was always the happy confidence in an institution of such exalted principles as the "Liberator," whose percentage, paid with a strict regularity—out of its own capital—

KEPT THE ROOF OVER THEIR HEADS.

This happy confidence was, all suddenly, without hint or warning, abruptly shattered. As an earthquake will break up the placid hush brooding over some tropical scene, so came the crash of the great "Liberator" Company. And just as the convulsion of nature's forces brings down huge buildings to the dust, shakes high mountains, and uproots great trees, so did the gigantic failure devastate countless homes.

The mother and daughter, who had already thought their lot a truly hard one, now knew what it meant to be really ruined. But in the daughter's fingers God had recently placed a new power—a pen to write of the sorrows and joys of others—echoes, perhaps, of her own. With this God-given weapon she fought her feeble hardest to be the bread-winner.

But the little home fell to the ground in the financial earthquake. The household gods were sold. And then, once again, the shadows—this time of poverty, not death—closed in around the two. Life was at its darkest. Groping forward, they found no light—yet.

But through the black gloom there was never despair. God forgives all things but despair. And this wholesale trust was not misplaced; it never is. It was little or no consolation to know that those in high places who had loved "salutations in the market-places"—the Stock Exchange, the City—and "the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts;" those who had "devoured widows' houses;" and, worst of all, who, "for a pretence, made long prayers," had received their deserts. Not in such retribution was comfort or alleviation to come to the

HAPLESS ARMY OF MARTYRS.

In the old days, when the Lord Jesus went up and down among men, there was in the Holy City of Jerusalem a wondrous pool. It was close by the Sheep Gate, where the flocks poured in for the Temple market. And it was "called in the Hebrew tongue, Bethesda, having five porches," and having also a heaven-sent quality of healing in its waters. That being so, there lay patiently round that pool all the days of the year "a great multitude of impotent folk . . waiting for the moving of the water. For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool and troubled the water"—that is, imparted its healing power to it.

And so it has been in these latter days. Ruined widows and orphans, crowds of self-denying workers of both sexes, and of varied ranks in life; a great multitude of impotent folk, truly dumb and patient in their helplessness, were gathered round the pool—the ruins, that is to say—of the "Liberator" in which they had trusted so blindly. For these stripped and homeless ones there were no loaves and fishes dealt out; depositors and shareholders alike stretched out and drew back empty hands. Not for them were even the baskets full of fragments, for there was "nothing in the pound," it was declared.

But while they waited, growing fainter with helplessness each day, an angel came down that way towards the pool. It was a man after God's own heart, with a personality—that of a soldier-priest—which instantly attracted; a worker in the vineyard who had laid down his own life-work, for the moment, to outstretch a hand to help needs and necessities more dire even than his own East London parish.

For him it was to come down and trouble the water, in order that the spent and starving multitude should step in and be healed of their injuries.

With his head and his heart Rev. Stockwell Watts conceived and encompassed a gigantic scheme of relief to meet to the innocent and the trusting. Courageously, he promised himself not to lay down his arms until he had gathered in the self-allotted harvest of £100,000, in order "that every one of them may take a little."

Yes, he, too, as did our Lord, had lifted up his eyes and beheld the "great company" of the beggared and the needy, and he, likewise, had had compassion on them.

This great, Christ-like work is well-nigh completed. Already the harvest is nearly gathered in, for £90,000 have poured into the fund from high and low, from rich and poor. And what of the ten—the needed remainder? That is for you who read to say. Surely the few completing thousands will also be gladly forthcoming from that unfailing treasury, the large Christian heart of the English-speaking people. The office of the "Liberator" Relief Fund, of which Rev. J. Stockwell Watts is secretary, is 16, Farringdon Street, E.C.

And the great work will be achieved—the Christian soldier's victory won, his reward secured. For on listening ears fall far-away echoes of that Divinest praise of all, to be his, of a surety, in the by-and-by coming to us, one and all:—"Well done, good and faithful servant . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

A "Liberator" Victim.

Life-saving at Sea.—The Royal National Lifeboat Institution reports, for the year ending June, 1898, the loss of 295 lives by shipping casualties, thirty-three less than in the preceding year. The remarkable fact in connection with life-saving work is that there should have been such a disproportion between the number of casualties (4,964) and the number of lives lost, and between the number of seamen and officers lost and the number of passengers; of the 295 lives lost, only seventeen were passengers. These, of course, are only round our own coast. Recently there was a painful instance of the men in a steamer treating the shipwrecked passengers badly, but the figures we have given tell an eloquent tale of the safety with which tens of thousands of travellers come to and go from our shores.

A Root and its Branches.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THERE is a certain room in London which has a peculiar fascination for me; and, if its walls could speak, they could tell tales which would startle the auditors. It is not a large room, and it is not elegantly furnished; it is in a house down a side street, and to the uninitiated there is nothing remarkable about it whatever. But every year the number increases of those who recognise its importance, and who can understand why it fascinates those who know it.

It is the private office of the superintendent of one of the most important of London's Christian missions, and there Mr. Wheatley sits daily to listen to the catalogue of sin and misery which an annual aggregate of 6,000 applicants pours into his ears. It has often been a wonder to me how he can face, and deal with, and assist this mass of misery, and still keep any faith whatever in human goodness, purity and honesty.

What a company it is which comes to him annually! What embodied tragedies, what living wrecks! Surely he needs the wisdom of a Solomon, the patience of a Job, the riches of a Crœsus; and, above all, the love of God in his heart, to enable him to deal wisely, patiently, helpfully, and effectually with his strange, sad "clients." We hope he may live long to be used amongst them and for them.

I was talking to him the other day about the extent of the work now as compared with what it was when it commenced in St. Giles' forty years ago. "Yes," he said, "it had but a small root then, it has many strong branches now; in fact, I suppose some of the branches are better known than the root. The public hears more of our prison work, and about our homes for friendless juvenile offenders, than it does about our house-to-house visitation, our Gospel services, our Sunday-schools, and our bands of hope, &c.; yet we are not primarily a prisoners' aid society, but and as the work was founded in St. Giles', it was called the St. Giles' Christian Mission, which title covers all our operations still. Of course, we do not confine our work to the parish of St. Giles. I presume there is hardly a parish in London, or a town in England, to which the benefits of our mission do not extend."

"Well then, Mr. Wheatley, as your operations are so manifold and far-reaching, do you receive proportional financial support from all districts?"

"God has been very good to us in the matter," he quickly and fervently answered, "and I have no doubt He will continue to send us all that is needed for his work. The winter months are, as you know, full of very urgent and pressing needs; and one of the things most painful to me is to hear the piteous applications of the poor, and yet, because of scarcity of funds, be unable to render them the help they so urgently need.

"At the present moment, one of our chief aims is to administer temporal relief to the sick and poor. It is really wonderful how little a large proportion of the well-to-do 'consider the poor.' The winter months, and especially the Christmas season, which brings happy reunions and plentiful repasts to the rich, bring intensified suffering to the poverty-stricken. It is by no means easy to get the semi-starved to listen to, much less accept, any message of God's mercy, while their physical sufferings are crying loudly for relief. The same God who has given them immortal souls has also given them sensitive bodies, in constant need of warmth, clothing, and food.

"We have always distributed several hundred Christmas dinners to deserving, struggling, poor families shortly before Christmas Day. God willing, we shall do the same again this year."

B. W.

The annual gathering in connection with Mr. Wheatley's work was held at the capacious mission chapel in Little Wild Street, W.C., on the 30th ult. It was, as usual, of a striking and pathetic character. A magnificent testimony to the value of the work was afforded by the presence of large numbers of young men and women who, since their rescue from careers of sin and degradation, have retained the situations obtained for them, and earned the confidence of their employers.

The platform was filled by many gentlemen occupying important positions on the judicial and magisterial benches, and words of high appreciation were sent by Dr. Anderson, of the Criminal Investigation Department.

Alderman T. Vesey Strong, one of the trustees of the movement, gave a graphic account of its beneficent operations. During the last twelve months 21,224 men had been provided with a free breakfast on the morning of their discharge. Of that number, 5,998 had been helped to redeem the past; and 5,917 had signed the temperance pledge. Alderman Strong pointed out, too, the important results accruing from visitation work. The workers sought out and relieved cases of genuine distress in all parts, and many a heart-broken prisoner's wife rejoiced that, just in time, assistance had been afforded her and her innocent but suffering children.

Mr. R. Loveland-Loveland, Q.C., who presided, gave a comprehensive review of the work, and, speaking as a judge, testified in earnest terms to its thorough but economical character. After pointing out that the Mission is practically a religious and philanthropic auxiliary to the country's legal administration, the speaker addressed the young people present, urging them to evince their gratitude by lives of Christian service.

Mr. Wheatley's address was full of cheer and encouragement, in spite of the depleted state of his cash-box. He rejoiced that so many who formerly lived by dishonesty were proving themselves so well. In this direction the last year had shown a remarkable record. The Malden Home of Rest for the sick poor had proved a benefit to very many needy creatures, and both in the women's and the lads' receiving and training homes the blessing of God had been manifested.

Judge Baylis, Q.C., Mr. W. R. McConnell, Q.C. (Chairman of the London County Sessions), Lieut.-Col. Rotton, and other supporters of the Mission, also spoke their hearty appreciation. The chief feature of the proceedings, however, was the presentation of prizes to those who had done specially well in situations. At this interesting function Mrs. Loveland-Loveland officiated, and remarkable enthusiasm was shown as the long file of happy recipients proceeded past the chair.

The East London Children's Hospital, at Shadwell, provides medical and surgical treatment for poor children in one of the poorest districts of London. The out-patient department includes the treatment of women, and there is also a convalescent home for children. During the past half-year, 712 in-patients and 12,698 out-patients were treated. Several cots at the hospital have been endowed, either in perpetuity or for the life-time of the benefactor. Others are supported by the contributions of friends interested in the work. Mr. Thomas Hayes is the Secretary, and communications may be addressed to him at Glamis Road, Shadwell, London, E.

Ross Bible Carriage Mission.—In a recent letter, Mr. John Coates writes:—"Both our tents have been busily employed in the surrounding counties. The Bible carriage has been the means of scattering much good seed. We commenced tent work in a village in Gloucestershire, intending to spend a fortnight there, but such an interest was awakened that the visit was prolonged for about five weeks. Many got blessing. In an adjoining village a similar interest was awakened, and a prolonged visit made. In another village the children were told it was sinful to come to the tent. We were informed, on good authority, that adults are there presented with a silver cross if they will make a vow never to enter any Nonconformist building. However, large numbers attended, and many received blessing. At another centre, a village steeped in ritualism, a spirit of hearing was manifested. On the removal of the tent, a barn was fitted up for meetings, and the preaching continued therein. Arrangements are being made to build a hall so that permanent work may be established. The Bible carriage is now being taken through needy towns and villages in Gloucestershire." Mr. Coates may be addressed Northleigh, Cantilupe Road, Ross.

The National Refuges.

IT is always more pleasant and profitable to take into consideration a Christian work which is in active operation, than to review an undertaking which belongs entirely to the past. It is, therefore, gratifying to know that the various useful institutions belonging to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children continue in full vigour, conferring blessings upon the community which it would be difficult to exaggerate.

When it is borne in mind that these Refuges have now been maintained for fifty-six years, and that upwards of 15,000 destitute children have been transformed into useful members of society, some idea of the magnitude of the good work achieved may be realized.

Throughout the length and breadth of the United Kingdom, and in distant countries beyond the seas, there must be many hundreds of respectable families who have cause to bless the philanthropic labours of the great Earl of Shaftesbury, and the indefatigable founder and former secretary, the late William Williams.

At the present period of patriotic fervour, when attention is so constantly drawn to the subject of our army and navy, there is a strong temptation, in dealing with the National Refuges, to speak especially of the Arethusa and Chichester training ships for poor boys of good character, because those vessels have done so much excellent work for the Royal Navy and merchant service.

But this natural inclination to deal with a popular topic should not lead us to forget the solid work which is being quietly and effectively done by the Society's Homes on shore for boys and girls.

Dealing first of all, as a matter of courtesy, with the Girls' Homes at Sudbury Hall, Wembley, and Ealing House, Ealing, we run a little risk, curiously enough, of causing embarrassment to the worthy matrons of those Homes. For, truth to tell, the dearth of well-trained servant girls is so great, and the demand for them is so enormous, that whenever publicity is given in newspaper columns to the training in progress at these Homes, the matrons are bewildered with

APPLICATIONS FOR SERVANTS.

This, of course, is one of the "signs of the times," and it is a constant source of regret to the Committee of the National Refuges that they cannot comply with a tithe of the applications received. Each of the girls' homes contains 100 young girls, who are carefully trained in those domestic duties which it is hoped and intended they will fulfil in the service of families needing their help. Thanks to the special tuition generously provided by the Worshipful Company of Cooks, the art of cookery is thoroughly taught at Sudbury Hall and at Ealing House.

Turning now to the Country Homes for Boys at Bisley, Surrey, the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools each contain 150 little lads, who are being carefully trained for useful work as tailors, shoemakers, carpenters, gardeners, bakers, page boys, farmers, or for regimental bands. It cannot be too frequently emphasized how beneficial the change is to poor, underfed boys, who are received from the stifling courts and alleys of London and transferred to the bracing air of Bisley. Subscribers interested personally in destitute cases, and relatives of the boys, are equally gratified and astonished at the WONDERFUL TRANSFORMATIONS.

In several instances it has happened that mothers, who had not seen their boys for some months, quite failed for a minute or two to pick them out from among the others with whom they were purposely placed. It gladdens the hearts of the superintendents and teachers to see the overwhelming joy of the mothers on such occasions.

Similar scenes are also not infrequent at Fortescue House, the Society's Home for Boys at Twickenham. Here 120 boys are under training similar to that at the Bisley Schools, with the exception of farming. The visit of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York to Fortescue House, last June, brought this Home prominently before the notice of the public; and the committee are gratified at having been enabled to erect the new classrooms and dining-hall, which were so urgently needed, and which were formally opened by their Royal Highnesses.

At Shaftesbury House, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, are the London headquarters of the Society, the ground-floor being used as offices and board-room, and the upper portion as a technical home for teaching the higher branches of tailoring and shoemaking. It is also a Refuge where very urgent cases can be immediately received, pending transfer to one of the homes or ships. It frequently happens that poor lads, are sent to Shaftesbury House by metropolitan magistrates. Police-court missionaries, clergymen, ministers of all denominations, as well as philanthropic private individuals, constantly bring cases of destitution to Shaftesbury House. The secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, personally hears applications every week-day morning at eleven o'clock, and the Admission Committee meets at frequent intervals, so that suitable cases may be promptly dealt with. Applications are likewise received by letter from all parts of the kingdom. The work is, therefore, really a national one, and not merely metropolitan.

The Society is dependent upon voluntary contributions; and there can be no better proof of its appreciation by the Christian public than the fact of the work receiving, for fifty-six years, freewill offerings for its maintenance and development. During the winter months, the provinces are visited by the finance and deputation secretary, Mr. Henry G. Copeland, who delivers free of charge, limelight lectures illustrative of the work carried on in the Society's eight Homes and two training ships.

No votes whatever are needed to ensure the admission of a destitute boy or girl, and it is doubtless owing to this pleasing fact that the Society is very popular amongst philanthropists who delight in personally championing the cause of poor children who need such help.

Mr. H. Bristow Wallen will be happy to furnish full particulars of the work to any of our readers who may write to him or call upon him at 164, Shaftesbury Avenue. The approach of winter always adds largely to the number of destitute cases which urgently plead for admission. It only remains for the Christian public to supply the funds for enabling so beneficent a work to be carried on. The cry of poor children must ever awaken the keenest sympathy of all.

London Aged Christian Society. — The object of this organization is to give permanent relief to the Christian poor of either sex, who have attained the age of sixty-five years. The latest report shows 146 pensioners on the roll of those benefited by the Society. The committee hope soon to be able to consider the question either of increasing the number of pensioners, or of augmenting the amount of the pensions. The funds have been increased by various legacies, which have been duly invested. The secretary is Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton Northcote, 32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.

Alderman E. Grove, J.P., D.L.

THE subject of this brief sketch, like many others who have served their day and generation to the glory of God, attributes the bent of his mind and the moulding of his character to the charm and influence of a godly mother.

He was born in Bilston in July, 1832, and comes of a family which for 150 years had been celebrated for its sturdy adherence to the Congregational body. Though he does not remember a time when he was not interested in spiritual things, yet at the age of fifteen, during a series of revival services at the Old King Street Wesleyan Chapel, Dudley, he definitely surrendered himself to God.

At an early age Mr. Grove became accountant at Messrs. Davies and Bloomer's, Gold's Hill Ironworks, West Bromwich, and removed to South Wales in 1852, when the Pontypool Works were acquired by Staffordshire capitalists. For a time Mr. Grove worshipped at St. James' Church, and undertook the duties of organist, rendering praiseworthy service. When the Welsh service gave place to the English in the Ebenezer Congregational Church, Mr. Grove joined, and laboured hard to sustain the weak and struggling cause.

In 1864, when the Ebbw Vale Iron, Steel, and Coal Company was launched, with a capital of £4,000,000, Mr. Grove was appointed secretary, which necessitated his removal to London. He there joined the Lower Clapton Congregational Church; and, as far as his limited time would allow, threw himself heartily into the work of the church, under the direction of Rev. Frank Soden, pastor. During his stay in London, Mr. Grove was plunged into deep sorrow by the death of his wife. But he strengthened himself in God, and devoted himself to compensate his four children in some little measure for the irreparable loss of a mother's influence and love.

In 1873 important changes were made in the Ebbw Vale Works; and, at the request of the directors, Mr. Grove undertook a responsible position, and returned to South Wales, settling at Newport, where he has since resided. He continued to serve the Company in this position wholly until 1884, and as to part of his time until 1891, when he finally retired.

On his arrival at Newport, he at once threw in his lot with the Victoria Road Congregational Church. He became teacher of the Young Men's Bible Class, and was soon afterwards elected a deacon. He has always taken a special interest in helping weak churches and establishing new ones in needy places in the county; and for many years he has been financial secretary to the Monmouthshire Congregational Union.

He is a staunch temperance advocate, and for ten years in succession was president of the Newport and Monmouthshire Band of Hope Union, and through his exertions a County Temperance Colportage Association was formed. Mr. Grove has closely identified himself with the social, moral, educational, and religious life of his adopted county, and is held in deserved honour far beyond the limits of the denomination of which he is an influential member. Indeed, the whole Church of Christ in South Wales, and nearly every organization that has for its object the glory of God and the bettering of the condition of our fellow-men, are indebted to him for services rendered.

His genius, natural aptitude, and painstaking labours were cordially recognised at the formation of the Monmouthshire County Council by his unanimous election as its first chairman, a post to which he has since been annually re-elected, with Lord Tredegar as vice-chairman the greater part of the time. He is a Justice of the Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county; and has rendered service as Chairman of the Asylum and Standing Joint Committees, as well as the county governing body which administers the Intermediate Education Act. He has also represented the County Council on the governing bodies of "Jones's Charity," the Boys' and Girls' School, Monmouth, and the Abergavenny Grammar School, and is still a Governor of Jones's West Monmouth Boys' School, Pontypool, and County Borough Intermediate School, Newport. At the death of the late lamented Lord Aberdare, Mr. Grove was elected to the position of Treasurer to the University of Wales.

In addition to his multifarious and onerous duties, he has found time to be secretary to the Abercarne Colliery Explosion Fund, and a trustee of the Llanerch Colliery Explosion Fund; also to sit upon the Welsh Land Commission; and to give evidence before the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Welsh Sunday Closing Act. Mr. Grove prepared a map showing that, if Monmouthshire were included in the operation of the Act, it would remove the agitations now prevailing amongst a population of about 200,000 living near the western and northern boundary of the county, to a population of about 9,000 on the eastern border, with the River Wye forming a natural division.

Mr. Grove never allows the pressure of public life to blunt the edge of his spiritual nature, but as the years pass he has grown in experience and in sympathy with higher aims and ideals. For three years past he has been one of the three conveners of the Newport Convention, which has been so fruitful in blessing to the people of Newport and the churches of the county generally.

May his bow abide in strength, and the latter years of so radiant a life be unclouded and blessed with the Master's "Well done."

The London Female Guardian Society, seeks, as its name implies, to rescue, reclaim, and protect betrayed and fallen women. It is an organization which renders to society at large services of the highest value, and imparts to the immediate objects of its care benefits of which eternity alone can declare the duration and worth. The Society snatches the victims of vice from the paths of ruin, shelters and consoles the miserable outcast, unfolds to her the pages of Inspiration, and points out the only effectual way by which the heart can be renewed, and the character restored. During last year, seventy applications were received, and many were temporarily helped and sheltered. In the industrial department the women are instructed in laundry operations, and are thus enabled to contribute largely to the revenue of the Society. The year closed with a debit balance on current account. The secretary is Mr. W. Edwin Page, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington, N.

Friendless and Fallen.

"THESE MUST BE SAVED."

IF it were possible to bring before your mind's eye the pitiable, forlorn, and sometimes abject condition of many of the young women and girls who are constantly seeking our aid, your hearts would be touched with sympathy and compassion; and from a feeling of humanity, as well as for Christ's sake, you would be constrained to use the above words, and you would do something to save them.

There are thousands of young girls of respectable moral character between fourteen and seventeen years of age who, on account of friendlessness, or the gross neglect of those who are their parents or natural guardians, are drifting to ruin. Some, from a sense of loneliness, have formed acquaintanceships that are bad; others, because of their homeless condition, and inability out of their meagre earnings to pay for a decent lodging, are forced to sleep among those whose very breath is corruption. Others, again, are running wild in the streets, and rapidly growing beyond control. They are approaching womanhood, with minds debased by evil communications, and with no good, wholesome, estraining influences. Such girls are CONSTANTLY BEING MET WITH.

Every year hundreds are brought for counsel, advice, or help; and it is a mercy that, through the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge, a very large number have been saved from falling.

Very specially useful is the Jubilee Training Home, in which fifty young girls, from fourteen years of age and upwards, are being instructed in the various branches of domestic service, as well as taught the precious truths of God's Word. All these girls have been gathered in from the most dangerous surroundings.

Sir George Williams, at the annual meeting of the Homes in May last, as chairman, said he would rather place a railing at the top of the precipice, even though it were of pure gold, than erect a hospital at the bottom. Prevention is better than cure; and it is, therefore, satisfactory to know that more than one-half of those who are actually admitted are young women and girls who have not forfeited their moral characters, although found in circumstances of great temptation and danger. But in addition to the successful preventive work being accomplished, the rescue work of the Institution will probably ever remain its prominent feature.

Nearly forty-three years have passed since the first Home, for sixteen inmates, was opened near Euston-square; the reclamatory agencies now existing, as the outcome of the pioneer labours of the first workers, are too numerous to detail. With the increasing need for more asylums for penitent young women and girls, this Institution has increased the number of its Homes and the accommodation in them, amid unmistakable tokens of the Divine blessing.

The Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is the supreme lever sought to be used in the Homes, and through this instrumentality many thousands have been led to true repentance and faith.

DURING THESE FORTY-THREE YEARS

the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge have been dependent upon the Lord's stewards for support; and we are deeply thankful to all who have assisted this mission of mercy in any way. Very, very many of those who contributed to the Institution in the early years of its history have gone to their rest, "and their works do follow them;" and those who have taken their places, and are numbered among the present supporters, will doubtless, in their turn, receive the "Well done!" of the Master. But, compared with the work to be accomplished, the annual income of the Society is altogether inadequate, and stands in marked contrast to the sums of money recklessly spent every night of the year in the haunts of wickedness.

We, therefore, very earnestly appeal to those whose sympathies go out for the salvation of friendless and fallen young women and girls, to help us liberally at this season, so that all the expenses involved in the work of the fast-dying year may be entirely defrayed before the 31st inst.

Details and instances of good accomplished have been purposely omitted; but those who wish for further particulars will be furnished with the same, post free, on application to me.

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR.

200, Euston-rd, London, N.W.

Miss Mary H. Steer.

MANY and useful are the organizations, aiming at the social and spiritual regeneration of the sinfuland suffering, which have come into being during the past forty years; and amongst them the Bridge of Hope, devoted to rescue and preventive work in East London, holds a place deserving of honour and esteem.

Miss Steer is the daughter of an honoured Congregational minister, and, privileged in her home life, grew up amid every incentive to a holy and useful life. Her interest in aggressive Christian work was, from early years, both fervent and practical.

In girlhood she took an eager part in open-air services, evangelistic missions, Bible classes, and many branches of work in connection with a flourishing evangelical church. As the days passed by, the young worker's ripening thoughts were naturally directed to the consideration of

A CHOICE OF LIFE WORK.

Farthest, perhaps, from her mind was any idea of becoming a pioneer of the modern purity movement; but at this time Miss Steer was much impressed by a luminous and forcible address given at Miss Macpherson's Home by Miss Ellice Hopkins.

With that impression came a divine call, sounding deeply in her soul, to aid the fallen womanhood of the metropolis. It was a task before which the strongest might have quailed. Melancholy as are the sights which are to be witnessed in the midnight streets, and in the haunts where scarlet vice flaunts itself unblushingly, such sights do not compare in open wickedness, we are glad to know, with the scenes of riotous revel which of yore rendered the name of Ratcliff Highway so infamous. Yet Miss Steer felt and knew that she had no choice but to go forward with the work into which she was so sensibly "thrust out" by the Holy Spirit. Although her personal preference inclined to an entirely different field of labour, she was obedient to the heavenly vision. In company with Miss Clara Lowe she set out to visit the houses of infamy with which St. George's was then crowded, and which were the theatre of almost incredible lawlessness. Here the two ladies secured a small house, into which they were able to gather their erring sisters. Ere long some of the most erratic characters made the place their resort for "a cup of tea and a chat." Their thoughts were gradually directed to higher subjects. Social and religious gatherings, which were arranged, had their due influence, the and the next-door house was added to the premises. Many of our readers are familiar with the subsequent developments of this remarkable work, and will recall with feelings of gratitude how a number of evil abodes were acquired, a public-house absorbed, and the present extensive and convenient houses erected.

A chief characteristic of the work to-day is its effectiveness as a preventive agency. Day by day young girls are rescued from positions of grave moral danger. Many of the cases are extremely pathetic. An idea of their nature may be gathered from a few illustrative applications. For instance, a police-court missionary writes:

The police have called my attention to the sad case of a little girl, named ——, who is just over thirteen years old, and a big girl for her age. She is the illegitimate child of a woman who appears to care nothing whatever about her. She has been from infancy in the care of a wretched drunken woman, who is living in sin. The people ill-treat her, and the police have several times taken her home to these people. The man in particular seems to behave in anything but a decent manner towards her. The child absolutely refuses to stay with them, and I have removed her to the house of a respectable neighbour, pending what I can arrange. She is a nice child, and big enough for your needlework class. May I bring her to you next week?

Another worker wrote respecting a little one:

Her father was formerly in a good position; but he was a drinking man prior to marriage, and has made his wife what she is, drunken and dirty. The children were lying on filthy rags, full of vermin. It is the worst case I have seen during twenty-five years' service. A priest was telegraphed for to fetch the children, and place them in a convent abroad. I had to take them away at once, but what should I have done had it not been for your kindness in taking them?

Here, again, is a heart-rending case from a police court missionary:—

A young woman was charged with being drunk and exposing her child, aged six, at 1.30 a.m. The woman is remanded, and the little one has been sent to the workhouse. Both mother and child were of genteel appearance. The mother was formerly a waitress, and had been led away and deserted. Subsequently she supported her child and herself on the proceeds of an evil life. For a month or so they have been without a home, and have frequently slept in vans, &c. They are dotingly found of each other, and the child is one of the brightest I have ever met. The mother is willing to give her up to me, and also to enter a home herself. We could easily deal with the child under the Industrial Schools' Act, but I have not the heart to do so. May I bring her to you?

From a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company, 54, Cheapside, E.C.

The contrast between the old surroundings and the new, when the children arrive at Miss Steer's Cottage Homes at Chingford, may be imagined. Brightly situated in close proximity to Epping Forest, the eight houses in which the children dwell are delightfully home-like in character. A thorough education, in which occupies an important place, is given to each child. Training in housework and such matters as all girls should be able to undertake, is usefully afforded by the Home "mothers," who are all devoted Christian workers. At the Refuge in Betts Street, a description of which recently appeared in our columns, the rescue work continues its beneficent course; but it is a matter for regret that, owing to the many claims that press upon public notice just now, Miss Steer finds financial obligations pressing heavily upon her. Her address is the Bridge of Hope, Betts Street, St. George's, London, E.

The Welcome Home.

THE Welcome Home, which has its head centre at Canning Town, is a real blessing to our seafaring population, which is increasingly abounding there. Miss Child, the founder and directress, with her friends around her, seeks for the spiritual welfare of our sailors; and, to achieve this end, nightly Gospel meetings are held in the attractive-looking Mission Room adjoining the Home, while the ships in the neighbouring docks are being constantly visited, and services held as opportunities offer.

As a result, on a recent Sunday no less than eleven signed the pledge, whilst several of them sought and found Jesus ever ready to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him. Many touching stories could be told if space permitted.

In November last year we had news of one of our young Christian sailors being washed overboard in the Atlantic during a severe gale. One of his last words to us before sailing was: "If ever you see my brother Albert, do get him to write home." We then spoke of the sadness of his mother's heart and all at home, at not having heard of Albert for some years, for whom much prayer has been often made.

On Sunday morning last, when visiting the ships, and inviting the "crews" up to the meetings and tea, this very Albert was among the number, although so altered that he had to make himself known. This he did during tea time, and we had the joy afterwards of inducing him to write to his mother. His heart was much softened on hearing of his favourite brother's death. Will friends join us in prayer for his conversion to the God of his mother and brother?

Many additional efforts are carried on, and among them the ministry of helping those who, through sin and Satan, have fallen into profound distress. For them help is provided, and in this the readers whose sympathy goes out to the sailors may be co-workers in supplying the financial means, and thus helping forward this Christ-like work. The "Christmas boat" is on the way, and wants filling with suitable cargo. Who will help in any way? "He that gives quickly gives twice." A beautifully-illustrated booklet, written by Mr. William Luff, will gladly be sent on application to Miss Child, Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.

The Orphan Home for Little Girls at Croydon has completed its fourteenth year. During that period, 167 little girls have been received, fed, clothed, and educated. In the past twelve months thirteen have passed out of the Home—six for service, one adopted, five returned to friends, and one died. Owing to the scarcity of funds, only seven fresh cases have been admitted. There are various ways in which friends of such work may help. On these points particulars may be had by addressing the secretary, Miss Smith, Dalkeith, Wellesley Road, Croydon.

Rescue Work by Women.—A little more than forty years ago, the first two missionaries of the Female Mission to the Fallen went out one night to try and rescue some of their wandering sisters. They were reasoned with and told of the love of the Lord Jesus, perhaps in a way they had never heard before. The enterprise was regarded with mingled ridicule and wonder; but, at the end of the year, those missionaries were able to report the rescue of eighty-six young women, who had also been placed in homes. The work has steadily increased since 1859, and there are now twenty-five missionaries. More are needed, and will be employed as opportunity offers. Ten thousand women have been placed in homes since the establishment of the Mission, and 2,700 have been restored to friends. About 700 are assisted yearly, besides those who are visited and advised. The annual expenditure of the Mission is about £3,700. Communications to Mr. A. Maddison, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.

"Out Hunting!"

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

"MASTER'S out hunting!" said a servant girl at a country vicarage to a colporteur who called and asked if the master were in. "So am I," said the colporteur; "but I suppose your master is hunting foxes, and I am hunting for souls;" and, to the astonished girl, the strange pedlar began talking of Christ and Salvation.

"Out hunting" was a very fit description of the colporteur's daily work—not over fields and meadows after a poor frightened fox, nor across the moorlands after a gallant stag; but along prosaic streets, suburban roads or country lanes; knocking, knocking, knocking at everybody's door, hunting for precious souls. His work is very quiet, nothing in it to attract attention, just plodding along; but he gets rare opportunities for telling out the glad tidings of great joy, and of gathering fruit also unto life eternal.

The work is of a most aggressive character. Through the house-to-house visitation, the colporteur meets with all sorts of people; and as he offers them a Bible, Testament, or some Gospel book for sale, some scoff, some laugh, others angrily slam the door in his face; while others listen to his faithful words, and his books are mostly bought by those who at first had no desire for anything of the kind. Colportage work is of great value as a for which it is in many respects specially adapted.

The spiritual darkness that reigns in many of our English villages is very saddening; removed as they are from centres of Christian activity, the light that is in them is often darkness indeed. Ignorance, drunkenness, and immorality widely prevail; and, with these, the greatest indifference to the things of God.

True, not a few are blessed with a godly ministry, and the Lord has faithful labourers even in the darkest places; but these often find themselves very much isolated, and none appeal more earnestly than they for help in the work of "holding forth the Word of Life."

Added to this state of things, an active Romish propaganda is now being carried on to an alarming extent, and the people are being led, by easy stages, from darkness and indifference into deadly error. About 1,500 villages are visited regularly by the colporteurs every month, besides thousands of roadside cottages and lonely farm houses; and much blessing has resulted from their labours. The people, as a rule, gladly welcome the visits of the colporteurs. They appreciate and understand the homely way in which the Gospel is put before them by men of their own station in life, and they often regard as a great boon the books which are by this means brought within their reach.

The following letter from a clergyman in the country, to whom a colporteur had been sent for a short time, bears warm testimony to the value of the work:—

"I just send you a line or two to let you know of the blessing which is attending your colporteur's work here. Already I trust several have to thank God for his visit. In addition to his daily work of visiting the people in their homes, and speaking the word in season whenever he comes upon them in the fields or on the roads, we have arranged several meetings in cottages of an evening, with, praise the Lord, hearts touched in every instance.—Thanking you very much for sending me such a man, I am, etc., ———."

Colportage has also been a channel of much blessing to a class of persons whom it is, perhaps, impossible to reach effectively in any other way. Many of them get quite out of the habit of attending any place of worship; not a few, especially in the wealthier houses, are prevented from doing so by the Sunday engagements of their employers, and it is sad to see to what an extent indifference to Divine things is to be found amongst them. To these the colporteur—the humble pedlar with his pack of books—usually finds access, and the work has been greatly blessed to multitudes of both male and female servants of every class. The Association has now a staff of 136 colporteurs stationed throughout England; and, during the past twenty-five years, have been sold, of the total value of £269,066, besides which eleven millions of Gospel tracts have been distributed.

16,000,000 OF BIBLES, BOOKS, AND MAGAZINES

Last year the Society opened a Training Home at Hastings, where candidates are trained for the work and put under a course of Bible instruction before being sent out to districts; and this has proved to be of very great value. It is in great need of help to maintain and extend this important work, and this will be thankfully received by Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, Treasurer; or Mr. H. D. Brown, Secretary, 37, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

In the Tower Hamlets.

IT is a great privilege to be allowed to interest the kind readers of THE CHRISTIAN in the Tower Hamlets Mission, which is now in the thirtieth year of its zealous, forceful service for God. A fifteen years' acquaintance enables me to speak without hesitation on the subject, nearly ten years of that period being spent in its vicinity in the Mile End, and in close fellowship with Mr. F. N. Charrington, the honorary superintendent, and his devoted workers.

In every community a great deal depends upon the head; and as a sustaining, governing leader of this great organization, Mr. Charrington shines. They may well call him because of his fighting, conquering qualities, in constant antagonism to the all-prevailing evil by which he is surrounded. He has taken the field for the last thirty years against the Khalifa of strong drink, and the hosts of Dervishes of vice (music halls included), which are its products. He has renounced an income of many thousands per annum rather than touch a penny of a patrimony made by this destructive agent, while his life has often been endangered by the attacks of its rowdy champions. Unlike our noble hero of the Soudan, however, he has not received a baronetcy or peerage for his services! His life-long warfare against "the Trade" would preclude the slightest possibility of this honour, nor does he seek for it; but he does look for that generous support for his work which will lighten the heavy responsibility, and enable him to carry on much that he is obliged to leave undone for want of means.

It has been a year of splendid generosity from the nation and the metropolis toward the many great needs of our Colonial possessions, through war, pestilence, and famine; but the home needs are not the less real, not the less urgent, and, alas! the supplies are very deficient! The poor have still to be fed, and clothed, and warmed, and this in thousands. The expenses incidental to such a large work have to be met: the "sinews of war" are as indispensable in this fight against poverty and sin as in our present operations in South Africa.

Need we speak to you of the Great Assembly Hall, now so widely known—that splendid building which can accommodate 5,000 to hear the glorious Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ preached by the best evangelists, which is open night after night to the throughout the year, where sinners are convicted and so many souls born again into the Kingdom of God, where many a wandering one has been reclaimed and brought back to house and home? Visit it some Sunday or other evening, kind reader, and verify for yourself how worthy of your hearty support is the Tower Hamlets Mission. A new century is about to dawn upon us; let it be an impetus in our life to do something special, something extra for God, and what more blessed field can we embrace for our efforts than this?

> Who blesses others in his daily deeds
> Will find the healing that his spirit needs!
> For every flower to others' pathway thrown > Confers its fragrant beauty on our own!

In that widely-read book of Mr. Sheldon's, "What would Jesus do?" we have the plan of campaign laid down for Christian workers in seeking the lost—that they should first give themselves to it, which is only a rescript of St. Paul's plan. Now this is just what Mr. Charrington, his life-long friend and secretary, Mr. Kerwin, and their devoted band of voluntary workers, have done for thirty years. Stepney Green is not a Riviera, nor the Mile End gutter a Mediterranean Sea; yet there do they spend winter after winter, seeking to save the lost ones! Why should we wait to say this until they are dead and gone—which is too often the case? Eulogy is only too often withheld until it becomes an elegy, and can no longer nerve and cheer those who are "toiling in rowing." Let us then give this meed of praise now, dear friends, and that by a hearty, speedy, generous contribution to their life work!

ROSE BENN.

Kingsdown Orphanage, N.

THE report for the last year of this Orphanage is most encouraging. On the first page we read—"Our last year closed with a deficit of £120, and the fact that the amount was received within a week of the audit became a gracious and emphatic reminder that God is true, and prayer effectual—a reminder that was especially recalled upon one occasion when we admitted three children, and were literally without money in bank or cash box." The increase, however, in funds this year is due to one or two generous gifts, not to an increased number of subscribers.

The homes at present have their full complement of occupants—ninety-six girls and boys at Pemberton Gardens (thirty-three being under seven years old), forty girls and infants at Tremlett Grove, and the same number at Cuthbert House, Broadstairs. The sales of work at both homes were successful, and the Forget-Me-Not League raised during the year £100 towards the funds. The whole report, which runs to some fifty pages, is bright and interesting reading. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, 35, Pemberton Gardens, N.

The Wynd Medical Mission, Glasgow, is an organization in connection with the Wynd Free Church. It is open twice a week, and, during the year, between three and four thousand patients receive advice and medicine gratuitously. There is a short religious service before the doctors arrive, and the patients are also visited in their houses by deaconesses and others. In connection with this Mission, there is a course of medical study intended for men and women who are preparing themselves for foreign mission work. The classes are held in the evenings so that those engaged during the day can attend. For such, the course takes three years, but any able to devote their whole time to study might get through in a little over a year. The doctors who take the dispensary work are Dr. Jane B. Henderson and Dr. James R. Riddell, while the doctors responsible for the classes or lectures are Dr. L. Burges, Dr. Riddell, and Mr. Kee. Communications may be addressed to Rev. John Riddell, 17, Bruce Road, Pollokshields, N.B.

"Grave Little Faces."

SHELTERING HOME, LIVERPOOL.

AGAIN we feel that we must bring before our friends the cause of the suffering, helpless, starving little ones of our great city. We seem more acutely impressed with the pallid, care-worn, grave little faces fronting the hopeless struggle to get bread sufficient for the next meal, when we contrast them with the sturdy boys and strong, healthy lassies we have been visiting in Canada during this past summer. There they are certainly never troubled with a care as to whether there will be bread for the next meal, or even whether a new pair of boots will be forthcoming when wanted.

A family of six were brought to the Home by the district nurse, straight from the mother's death-bed. The father had deserted them twelve months previously. During the mother's illness they had got

UTTERLY WILD AND NEGLECTED.

Where was food to come from to satisfy the six? They were all taken to the Sheltering Home, and are now all placed in Canadian families, instead of drifting to the workhouse.

We found our children heartily welcomed this summer in Canada, and many homes kindly opened to receive, for love's sake, the little ones of our party.

Mrs. L——, who has brought up a girl, now fifteen years old, took a boy of seven and a girl of six. She wished "it had been possible for her to have kept Willie (another wee boy) also, he was such a dear little fellow."

Another family took a little boy, and promise to take his sister if we will bring her out next year.

We also saw many whom we took out in former years gradually advancing in position and prospects. Forty-seven have married this year.

Charlie E—— has over 200 dollars saved.

George I—— sent twenty dollars to his aunt.

Thomas C—— has 200 acres of land near a river and railway station.

William L—— rents a shop, lit by electric light, and keeps a man to assist him in the shoe business.

Robert G——, married; sent ticket for his mother in the workhouse to go out and live with him.

Maggie L——, awarded Teacher's Advanced Elementary Diploma, ranked seventeenth in class of sixty.

Fred Y——, on leaving college, had offers from four different towns, inviting him to become secretary to their Y.M.C.A.

Besides the work of the Home in training and placing out in life the fatherless or orphan, a is held weekly, at which they get a good dinner and a sixpence for the hour and a-half's sewing. One of these writes:—"We are so rejoicing that the class is open again;" and we feel they look forward to it as the brightest event of their week, bringing them warmth, cheer, and friendly faces and voices, interested in hearing how they are getting through the weary winter.

About £20 will enable us to present each widow with a black serge skirt for Christmas.

We are now approaching the happy season of superabundance in many homes; but, to the poor children, the colder and inclement weather means lack of necessary warmth, clothing, and food.

The City Council have granted the use of St. George's Hall once more to accommodate 5,000 children to our annual CHRISTMAS DINNER AND TREAT.

We hope friends will send in their contributions to provide "a good, square meal" for the hungry little ones, who will be gathered from all parts of the City. They should be marked for "The Home," or "The Christmas Dinner," or "Widows."

Lost in London!

FIELD LANE REFUGES.

MOST country people who have visited London on pleasure have experienced the by no means pleasant sensation of losing their way. There is always one at hand, who is supposed to be, and very often is, a very vade mecum in putting lost people in the right way—we mean the ubiquitous policeman. He is the friend of the lost in London. This feeling of being lost with money in one's pocket is nothing to what the feeling must be to those who have no money, no friends, and nowhere to lay their heads. To such the harmless, necessary policeman is more of an enemy than a friend. The stern official "Move on!" brings fear to the guilty, but strikes terror and despair to many poor creatures perfectly innocent of any crime but that of being poor. Helpless in many instances, homeless in every case, friendless and destitute.

It is a singular fact that human beings are the only members of the animal kingdom for whom nature has provided no resting-place. In this respect they are like the Lord Jesus Christ, who said, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." In London the awfulness of such a situation is beyond description, and must be experienced to be gauged accurately.

Here is one, a youth in years, his face pinched and blanched with the cold east wind, his only protection a patchy thin coat, ragged trousers through which can easily be traced the thin leg, and boots, or rather apologies for such, through which his dirty heels protrude. What has he done? That is not the first question to ask. What he wants is help first and sympathy afterwards. But see, as he continues plodding on, a ray of light reaches out into the night, now very dark; the flaring lights of the public-houses look attractive, but, being penniless, he passes on, and comes at last to the door of Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools. Here he finds warmth and food, and friends to help him; and here he can be made, in the true sense of the word, a man. The Field Lane Institution provides relief for the poor, homeless, starving people who flock to them for shelter the whole year round, but especially during the winter. Most of the

have been pitiable to behold; and one of the great and salient features is providing work for the poor creatures, thus rendering them, in a measure, self-supporting. Of these, the Institution has helped 13,000 since its inception. A truly noble work. Besides this, 1,043,242 free meals have been given, and more than 35,000 religious services have been held.

Another feature of the work done has been the maintenance of 2,950 children in the Industrial Schools at Hampstead. This is the solution of a great problem. Most of these have been sent out into the world, fitted for battle of life, and armed with the sword of the Spirit. Here is

A TYPICAL CASE.

Copy of a letter received by the matron.

I have tried to call on you both last week and this, but have failed to find time. The enclosed £1 was voted to your Institution by our Workhouse Girls' Aid Society, at our last committee, at the same time our ladies send you their best thanks for your great kindness to poor little Mary R——. A sad life, indeed, hers was. She told me, I am glad to say, that she had come to Christ. . . . I am thankful to feel that when at Field Lane she heard the way of salvation.

Matron's account of the case.

About two years ago Mary R——, aged sixteen, was brought here by a lady, one of the Guardians of the Westminster Workhouse Schools, where the girl had been brought up. She had been sent to a situation from there; but her mother, a very bad woman, had found out her daughter's address and persuaded her to leave, and after selling all the girl's clothes she turned her adrift. For many nights she slept in the streets, and only having a dress on, took a violent chill. A policeman, seeing how ill she was, took her to a hospital. From there she wrote Mrs. C—— asking her to help her when she was well enough to leave her bed. This Mrs. C—— did by bringing her to us. We received her, and she remained here for nearly twelve months, but seemed a most delicate girl, and, not getting stronger, was sent to Highgate Infirmary. We visited her regularly, but she gradually became weaker and weaker, and passed away between two and three months ago. The doctor said there was no doubt that the nights she had spent in the open had sown the seeds of consumption. She always told me how grateful she was to us all here for our kindness to her, as she had no other friends in the world except Mrs. C——.

The season is now on when the work of this Institution is very great. The principal drawback is the paucity of funds, and the committee fear that they will be under the painful necessity of unless more financial help is given, as the funds at their disposal are entirely exhausted. It is in the power of our readers to avoid this catastrophe, and to help forward this great and noble work.

Christianity is founded on sacrifice. Christ's life on earth and his cruel death was a stupendous sacrifice; and can we, who are his followers, refuse to make a sacrifice in order to befriend the friendless?

It is a privilege to give to such an Institution, carrying on as it does such a variety of work, and which has also such a wide scope of usefulness. Be sure it will be returned to you a hundred fold. Let us remember his words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

It is eminently fitting that Christmas should be associated with liberality on the part of God's people, as the time stands for and symbolizes an event which towers above all others in God's approaches to man in mercy and grace. Christ's coming was God's giving, and it is well to walk, not only in the way of Christ's condescension, but also in the way of God's generosity.

THE HOMELESS ON SUNDAY.

What is being done with the homeless men and women of London, and what becomes of them on Sundays? In this great city of ours, with its thousands of men and women in it who have no home, and nowhere to spend their time, except loafing about the streets, or, when they have a few coppers to spend, in the public-house, the above question must constantly arise in the minds of our more fortunate brethren.

We can answer the question—at least, with regard to 600 or 700 of them. This number is to be found, every Sunday morning, at what is called the Ragged Church Service, which is held from twelve to one o'clock at these Field Lane Refuges.

A truly touching sight it is to see this vast number of tramps filing into the large hall (capable of holding 700 people) and receiving their piece of bread before the service begins. And then they settle down in their seats to a nice bright hour spent in singing hymns, listening to the reading of the Scriptures, and a telling address from one of the friends engaged in this great work.

This is not all. They are not sent away empty, for at 1 o'clock, when the service closes, mugs of hot cocoa are handed round to all present, and a further supply of bread is given. What a splendid thing it is that such places as this exist, where they may hear the Gospel; and what a boon they are to the poor! But those who know anything at all about housekeeping will realize what a long purse it requires to keep such a work as this going.

The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, and the address of the Refuges is Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, London, E.C.

Malmesbury Park, Bournemouth was last summer the scene of a memorable tent mission. Unfortunately there was no building available for the maintaining the services which had been fraught with such blessing to both believers and unsaved. It was at length resolved to erect an iron room, and although the project was met by many difficulties, it was nobly carried through. The hall is now open, and the workers are looking forward with hopeful anticipation for the debt—£130—to be entirely and speedily removed. Communications from friends wishing to share in this work may be addressed Miss F. E. Campbell, Kingsholme, Richmond Park, Bournemouth.

Shaftesbury Institute, N.W.

WRITING from the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, Miss Meredith Brown says:—

It may be remembered that some months ago we received, unasked, the gift of £1,000, from the late Miss Jane Barclay, to found a much-needed Deaconess House in connection with the work of the Shaftesbury Institute Mission. Miss Barclay did not live to see the house established. This gift was her last work, and one week later she was called into the presence of the King.

The premises selected were formerly a chemist's shop and house. But they have been entirely altered; the shop front has been taken out, and a pretty bay-window, with railings in front (the special gift of friends), put in and another storey has been added to the house. Over the window stands the inscription in stone:

"JANE BARCLAY HOUSE, JUNE 28, 1899,"

the date on which the house was named by H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany at our annual meeting in the Speaker's House. The house lies close to the Institute, but on the quiet side, and there is a door or communication through. The furniture, for which a cheque for £200 was given, is the gift of Sir Fred Wills, Bart.

On Wednesday last week the house was opened by a short dedication service, and the rooms (amply large for the deaconesses, but small for an audience) were filled by interested friends, who had come to meet with us, to pray that blessing might rest on the house, on the work, and on the deaconesses.

The chair was taken by Rev. R. Taylor (formerly of Upper Norwood); and Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, amid his many engagements, most kindly came to give the address and the "charge" to the deaconesses. Among those who took part were Rev. J. Telfer (assistant to Rev. Dr. Hanson), Major Eckford, Colonel Cay, and Mr. Donald Matheson.

Mr. Webb-Peploe's address was singularly helpful, being founded on Luke v. 1-11. Having derived many practical thoughts from the incident, he spoke in terms of sincere sympathy with the workers. "Some of us," he said, "well remember the time when the Lord asked us to do some little thing for Him: it was trying, but we were willing and obeyed. Then directly the command came: Now, 'launch out into the deep and let down your nets.' Then much more important, lay before us. 'Oh, but I can't do that, I am not fitted for it, and what would others think? I'll take a humbler part; I'll do some of it, and just see how I get on.' And so others were called in to do the work which we were meant to do. Through not being fully yielded to God's power, the result is failure. If only we would allow God to work through us to the full, if we were willing to be used to the full, the result would be a draught of fishes; but, owing to our want of faith, the net breaks, and we lose the blessing.

"When Simon Peter saw what had been done, he got such a sight of his Lord, in his Divine nature, as the Jehovah-Jesus, that he exclaims, 'Depart from me: how shall I abide the blaze of this glory? I am not fit company for Thee; I am a sinful man.' He does not say, I am a sinner; it was not any particular sin, but an abhorrence of his own utter sinfulness. With this discovery of himself came the power: 'Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men; then they forsook all, and followed Him.'

in connection with this passage might be remembered:—(1) 'We have' (v. 5): Failure. (2) 'I will' (v. 5): Faith. (3) 'I am' (v. 8): Confession. (4) 'Thou shalt' (v. 10): Power."

Speaking directly to the deaconesses, Mr. Webb-Peploe said:—"Some of you are about to begin a fully surrendered life; you have left your family and home for the life of service. You have a splendid example before you—Moses, the man of God; when he had come to years of discretion, refused his earthly home, and that a palace, to find an abiding place in God. He made a deliberate, distinct and definite choice; he refused luxury and earthly pleasure, and "chose rather affliction with the people of God." He refused riches, and chose poverty. He made an estimate: he considered the reproach of Christ of greater riches or value than the treasures in Egypt. Why? for he had respect to the recompense of the reward. The reward was, an abiding-place in God. The only Psalm written by Moses is the ninetieth: 'Lord, Thou has been our dwelling-place in all generations.' Or, as the margin of Psalm xxv. beautifully expresses the thought: 'His soul shall lodge in goodness.'

"If you, who are given up to this work, are fully consecrated to God, yours will not be

A LIFE OF LUXURY.

In many ways it will be a life of trial and difficulty, for you will see the worst side of life, but you will have your reward; and if you live the life of fellowship, of abiding in God, you will have the joy of knowing that you bring comfort to the heart of Christ. Seven points might be remembered from the allusion to the life of Moses in Hebrew xi.: (1) He refused. (2) He chose. (3) He esteemed. (4) He had respect. (5) He forsook Egypt. (6) He endured. (7) He kept the Passover.

"As an infant, at tender years, he was drawn out of the water (emblem of the place of death), and he was sent back to draw others out of it, after he was sprinkled with the blood. So we are called from death to life, and then sent back to draw others out of the waters. But we can only be used to do so if we are living the resurrection life: we are called out of the world, and then we are sent back into it to lead others out of it, after we have been sprinkled with the blood. Let us see to it that we never look back to the world, and that we always bear on us the marks of the blood."

The Christian Community:

A Fruit of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685.

LITTLE did Louis XIV. dream of the world-wide results of his wicked oppression of his Huguenot subjects. Little could he know that the overruling providence of God would strengthen Protestant States, and found new communities which would work for the establishment and propagation of the Gospel which he so greatly dreaded and hated.

So, however, it has fallen out. Not only has the course of Germany, Holland, and Switzerland been quietly moulded and a strong Protestant nation been established in South Africa, but England also, which hospitably received the fugitive Huguenots to the number of 50,000, has reaped her reward, not in manufacture and commerce only, but markedly also in godliness.

The Christian Community (or Communauté) was founded by them in Soho, St. Giles', and in Spitalfields, and has continued its beneficent work—with some periods of partial suspension—for more than 200 years. Early records have almost perished, but, from 1772, the history of the Community is well known, and the 127th annual report, which lies before me, testifies to the continuity and activity of the Society from 1772 till to-day.

Since 1772 many things have changed. The prosperous foreign communities in East London have migrated—leaving only the more feeble and less enterprising in the old dwellings—and they have gradually been merged in the English population, or have died out. From various causes the district which the Huguenots enriched is now the centre of a great mass of poor population, on whose behalf this "Communauté Chrétienne" continues to labour with increased facilities and enlarged instrumentalities. The Community was founded to care for the poor and feeble; and, till this day, selects its many fields of labour among the most poverty-stricken and sorrowful of men.

The workhouse, the infirmary, the casual ward, the low lodging-house—these are its chosen fields of operation:—the homeless, the sick, the lonely woman, the neglected child, the hunger-stricken wanderer, the fallen woman, the ruined drunkard constitute the objects of its care. Its primary, essential, and recognized work is to seek by the ministry of the Word; the exhibition, before men, of the One Saviour—the Lord Jesus Christ; and this, its primary mission, is fulfilled to its power towards many thousands of persons every year.

As auxiliary to this work the community carry on many subordinate but very important operations. At its centre in Bethnal Green and in the seven mission halls which it supports in London, much earnest love is continually in exercise to provide resting places for the absolutely homeless, food for the desperately hungry, and employment for the most necessitous of the unemployed. The Community also seeks to win the way to hearts which know little of comfort or gladness, by excursions of the aged and the children into Epping Forest during the summer months, and by winter festivals for the same classes in workhouses and infirmaries.

During the summer 4,000 workhouse inmates were taken into Epping Forest, and 10,000 were entertained at Christmas. Besides these, 2,000 adults and children had a day in the country, while 450 children had a week's outing in the country.

It is difficult to determine how many inmates of common lodging houses are spoken to in a year. I have spoken to as many as 200 in three such places in one evening, and at least 2,000 must hear the Gospel every week in the many houses visited in Spitalfields, Stoke Newington, Poplar, the Borough, Hackney, and elsewhere. Thirty thousand meals are given during the year, and some 1,700 homeless men are provided with a night's shelter.

The work is done by 450 workers, who give their unpaid service week by week; and, for the Master's sake, spend many hours in uncongenial places, enduring much roughness and discomfort in kitchens, in workhouses, and on the pavements at open-air services.

In these various ways many thousands of the very poorest of our East London people are benefited, and the highest results are not wanting, for each year brings its harvest of renewed hearts and changed lives, to the glory of God and the encouragement of his servants.

It has been laid upon the hearts of the committee to seek three special objects in the opening century. 1. Nearly all our workers are poor persons, earning a poor living, and with little or no opportunity for making provision for

THE DAYS OF ENFEEBLED AGE.

Some, after from ten to forty years of unpaid and loving service, have had to find refuge in the workhouse. We feel that this ought not to be, and are desirous of forming a modest fund from which some assistance may be given in cases of great need.

2. Some of the seven mission halls of the Community are insufficient and in bad condition. They should be improved for the sake of the workers and the work.

3. There is room for extension of the work, and we desire to be able to enter through several open doors to fields full of promise.

For these ends we are asking for TEN THOUSAND POUNDS as a TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND. The treasurer is F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.; Rev. John Gritton, D.D., hon. secretary; and the secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, Memorial Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, E.

May the Lord, whose glory the Community seeks, vouchsafe to his people a willing heart to meet our need. J. G.

Harley College Deaconesses.—The night school work, conducted by the deaconesses, has commenced its winter season. The object is to reach the men, lads, and girls, who can hardly be persuaded to attend even a simple Gospel service, let alone regular Divine worship. The Medical Mission relieves, with free physician and medicine, hundreds of the East London poor and sick. The workers will be glad of clothing for wise distribution among the poor. Communications should be addressed to Pastor James Lyall, Berger Hall, Empson Street, Bromley, E.

Dinna Forget Spurgeon!

IN the Stockwell Orphanage Magazine, Within Our Gates, which will be posted to every subscriber, there is a characteristic article by the author of "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," with the above title, to which is added the following pointed postcript:—

"DINNA FORGET SPURGEON'S ORPHANS."—"Had Mr. C. H. Spurgeon desired a memorial, none more appropriate could have been designed than a Home and School for five hundred fatherless children. The appeal for its maintenance should meet with a generous response from all who revere his memory, especially from those who were won to the Saviour, or who have been inspired and helped by his wonderful ministry. When it is remembered that his two sons, themselves orphaned, are the Presidents, the ten thousand pounds a year required will surely be forthcoming, to enable them to perpetuate a work which was so dear to their father's heart."

As the President of the Orphanage, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon puts forth an eloquent plea to which, we are sure, our readers will be pleased to respond:—

DEAR FRIEND,

You are probably well aware by this time that "Christmas is coming." Preparations for its festivities are already in hand, and appeals for its charities are even now arriving. Since I and my colleagues are responsible for the maintenance and education of nearly 500 fatherless children, I am anxious not to be behindhand in reminding you of their daily needs, and of their hopes for Christmas Day. They require £10,000 during the year to keep them going, and they expect a very special inflow of practical sympathy as the festive season approaches.

If you have helped the year through, you will doubtless send a Christmas gift to crown your systematic generosity, and we are hoping that some who have failed to remember us in other months, will cause December to be a notable exception to the rule. There will be no less joy in your own family if you help to add to the happiness of the big fatherless family at Stockwell, so the best way to wish you joy is to suggest that you make these Orphans happy.

Does the return of Yuletide threaten to stir sad memories within your heart? We can sympathise with you in that case. Our large-hearted Founder is never more missed than at this season. He was the winter sunshine of the Orphans' Christmas. Moreover, he who greeted you as President last year, has in the meantime been summoned hence. In many a young heart, despite the outward tokens of merriment, there is likely to be a sigh and a sob.

If each and all "do their best to make music for the rest," the Christmas glee at Stockwell, and at Margate (for the little ones at our Sea-side Home must not be forgotten), will reach even to the mothers, and cause the widows' hearts to sing for joy. Can they help being glad (though they have saddening memories, too) that their fatherless little ones have "joy and gladness, a feast, and a good day?"

So I confidently ask for a record response to our Christmas appeal, and for kind thought of our girls and boys throughout 1900. May it be a Happy New Year to you, through the rich mercy of God. Yours heartily and gratefully,

THOMAS SPURGEON.

Lantern Lectures.—Many educational and philanthropic organizations are, at this season of the year, seeking to combine amusement with recreation in the service of the public. In order to remove the difficulty which frequently arises in the matter of selecting suitable subjects, four interesting lectures have been prepared, with lantern-slides, by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode. Conditions and terms on which they will be forwarded, for use at religious and other institutions, will be sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope to Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Great New Street, London, E.C.

[END OF SUPPLEMENT REPORTS.]

Ragged School Work in Spitalfields.

THE chairman at the fifty-fourth annual meeting of the King Edward Ragged Schools' Institute and Mission was the Rt. Hon. Evelyn Ashley, son of the seventh Earl of Shaftesbury. The Earl of Shaftesbury was president of the work until his death, and Mr. Charles Montague, the hon. superintendent, has held his office for over thirty years. The meeting was held on November 28. Mr. Albert Montague read an abstract of the report; and the cash account showed that, financially, the past year had been one of the most satisfactory on record. The general operations were shown to be both extensive and comprehensive. The Sunday-schools at the two stations have an average attendance of 1,500 children. The Gospel services on Sundays and week nights are well attended. There are also free night-schools as well as industrial classes for teaching various arts to lads and girls. There is a Christian Association for young people of each sex; and also Bible classes for working men and women. A trained nurse and others visit the sick in their own homes. The band of hope, the savings' bank, the reading-rooms, &c., are all in a flourishing state; and there is a large working distribution of good literature from door to door. One cause of perplexity is the wholesale immigration into the neighbourhood of foreign Jews of the poorest sort, whose competition in the labour market is a sore trial to our own people.

The Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY expressed pleasure at finding the work still flourishing. He compared the King Edward institutions to an oasis in the desert. The Mission had been a pioneer in many new ideas. Addresses followed by Rev. Mr. TATE, Mr. JOHN KIRK, and others. Lady TEMPLEMORE, sister of the chairman, distributed prizes to sixty-five lads and girls in recognition of good conduct in their situations. These consisted of writing-desks, workboxes, watches, etc. It may be added that Spitalfields still retains traces of the French Protestants who settled there on being driven from their country by persecution 200 years ago. Some of the descendants of these people may still be found at the Mission services, and the best Spitalfields' silk is the finest to be purchased.

Ragged-Schools and Bands of Hope.

A CONFERENCE of ragged-school teachers was held last week in the library of the Baptist Mission House, Furnival Street, E.C., to consider how the principles of the Band of Hope Union could best be extended among the schools. Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS presided. Mr. Charles WAKELY, secretary of the Union, said that if people did not like drink as a friend it might be overcome. The Band of Hope Union commenced in 1855 with sixteen societies, and there were now 78,000 societies. He noticed that every ragged-school had not got its band of hope. Why should any be outside when no schools were situated where there were no public-houses.

Each school ought to have its band of hope, and their object was to extend that work. He had himself given ten years to ragged-school work, and any usefulness he might have shown had arisen from experience then gained.

In emphasizing the necessity of the work, the secretary mentioned the £154,000,000 of the nation's annual drink bill, and the 178,000 drink-shops which that expenditure maintained. Those who had to face the evil knew its nature, but some people did not realize the connection between drink and all that was evil. When Lord Palmerston, on one occasion, presided at a ragged-school meeting, it was found that a ragged-school child had never come from a teetotal home. Drink was the greatest enemy of the Church, and a supreme effort should be made, for there were children who, on account of the constitutions they inherited, were sure to become drunkards unless they were brought in. Without either coaxing or bribery the children should be interested, and at each meeting some temperance truth should be taught with love and sympathy.

The parents should be seen, and their consent obtained for the children to join the society, and then they would not teach them to drink. It was a work of self-sacrifice; but they would have their reward. Total abstainers alone should engage in the service. A discussion followed. Mr. John Kirk (Ragged-School Union) and others took part.

"Seven Years After."

SPEAKING at Belfast, at a meeting before the Lord Mayor (who presided) and the Lady Mayoress, Mr. J. B. WOOKEY, deputation secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, said:—

Seven years ago, while he was the guest of an honoured Irish Christian magistrate, a lean, hungry-looking, ragged boy came to the door and inquired if the gentleman from Dr. Barnardo's Homes was staying there. When interviewed, the boy entreated with tears to be taken into the Homes. He was born in the poorhouse of that town. His poor mother—betrayed, forsaken—died the day of his birth, and in all the wide world that poor Irish boy had not a single friend. For nearly two years he had been living practically on the streets.

Searching inquiry into his history proved that he had told the unvarnished truth. They gladly took the boy to their London Homes. After careful training and testing he was sent to Canada. Within the last few days Mr. Wookey had seen a letter from that lad, now a young man, in which he told the magistrate referred to that he is earning 35dols. a month, with his board.

In being sent to Canada, he felt he was going out of bondage into a land flowing with milk and honey. Everything in his letter pointed to happiness and prosperity for body and soul. It is when they came to rescue like this—when their own eyes had seen and their hands had handled—that they realized what it means to have rescued 38,000 children.

The Ocean of Grace! *

LIKE the ocean flowing, flowing,
Round these stony reaches brown,
Filling every rough indenture,
Striving every rock to drown—
So the grace of God is pouring
Round us from its deeps profound;
Rolling in its glorious fulness
On our barren being's bound.

Runs the sea round small and greater,
Over hollow, over height;
Fitting to each crannelled contour
Its elastic waters bright.
So God's love our need encircles
With its liquid, sunlit tide,
Leaping up in foam-white beauty,
Each unlovely ledge to hide.

And our stony, grey-black sorrows,
Piercing, rough, his great love laves,
Till they seem immersed in glory,
Over-washed with emerald waves.
And above them, clear as crystal,
Curve on curve in purpling space,
Roll in endless undulations
God's pure ocean-deeps of grace!

MRS. MERRILL E. GATES.

Social Purity.—The crusade initiated by the Central South London Free Church Council in promoting the cause of purity and temperance have, it is hoped, laid the foundation of reformed social conditions in the neighbourhoods affected. Since July, 1898, there have been many prosecutions, and the attention of the Chief Commissioner of Police has been called to the exhibition of improper pictures on the streets. Further particulars of this section of the Free Church Council's work may be obtained from Mr. J. O. Bairstow, 15, Surrey Square, S.E.

Evangelical Bible Classes.—The fourth annual report of the Young Men's Evangelical Bible Class Federation indicates that the movement is no longer confined to the Metropolis, but is being introduced to various parts of the country where centres have been established with the object of fitting young men for Christian service. The annual meeting of the Association was held a few days ago at Islington, when it was announced that there were twenty-nine classes affiliated. The address of the secretary (Mr. R. M. Waterhouse), who will furnish all particulars, is Maybank Road, South Woodford.

Missionary Support.

THE question raised by "Quartus" regarding missionary support has evoked letters from several friends interested in the points and issues involved. It will be remembered that "Quartus" indicated the danger attending the principle of sending forth young missionaries without assured support. "Does it not," he said, "throw a heavy burden often upon young and inexperienced persons, and add greatly to the pressure upon mind and heart?"

The importance of the question is generally allowed, and there seems little or no disposition to advocate one method as possible or desirable for all times, places, and circumstances. The letters we have received hardly face the specific question raised by "Quartus." "Believer" instances one organization which carries on work without appealing for funds; and another which carries on a similar institution, and presses upon all Christians the privilege and responsibility of giving money in support. The one method does not exclude the other. "A Missionary informs me of half-a-dozen cases of workers who had started on 'faith' lines in India, and had come to grief. Some of them had their faith nearly wrecked. We are but finite creatures, and our ability is limited. A missionary away from spiritual fellowship, surrounded by indifference and spiritual death, has surely enough to exercise his soul about without having laid upon him the anxiety and burden of funds. Let others 'hold the ropes.' 'Bear ye one another's burdens.'"

Mr. C. H. Judd, for many years missionary in China, relates his own experience. His needs were ever supplied:—"Twice we were brought into a position which cut us off for some time from mission support; but we lacked nothing, and have at times remarked that God usually sent us the best food when we had the least money with which to buy any. Presents came from persons who had no idea of our circumstances . . Times of trial have brought many blessings; nor is the least that bond of love which has often led many of our number to part with some of their small stock, and send it to such as had greater need." In a word, Mr. Judd maintains that the advantage in testimony for Christ is with the worker who has no assured support.

Another experienced missionary in the Chinese field, "S.," argues that the worker should be a partner in the undertaking, and not a paid agent. Therefore he should share the responsibility and not be relieved of it. This friend shows indirectly that even the worker who is assured of support, if he would be true to his mission, must exercise faith: "As a matter of fact (little known to the supporters of missions at home) missionaries do on their own account if their mission is to be a success; they often feel led to take risks, or rather to take unsparing pains to discover the will of God concerning their movements, and then to go forward. And they are not forsaken by God." The history of the C.M.S., recently issued in three volumes by Mr. Eugene Stock, is quoted as bearing abundant testimony to the policy of faith. Trials may be for the servant's good; but whether they should be precipitated or facilitated by methods that may be unwise, though well meant, is a point into which this correspondent does not enter.

A fourth letter is by Mr. James Van Sommer who deals rather with the relation of the missionary to local churches than with conditions arising from the comparative or total absence of such relation. Many years ago a number of Christians, already donors in their individual capacity, supplemented their gifts by proposing to their church assembly the adoption of the principle—that they should, as a local church, in the field. From 1852 to 1862 Mr. Van Sommer had the privilege of over-seeing the application of this principle. The correspondence was divided between several friends, male and female, and in that way the movements of the labourers were followed, and their arms were supported by periodical prayer. The money collected in closed boxes was apportioned in moderate amounts. "If the individual was otherwise provided for, his work could be strengthened by a little money. Sometimes it was expedient to estimate beforehand the total amount thought advisable to remit; and very curiously, when the contents of four or five boxes were added together, it again and again proved that the total was just about the sum mentioned." This mode of nurturing missionary interest and aid—by direct church action—is commended as easy to practise, and full of life and blessing to all concerned.

COMMUNICATE DIRECT WITH LABOURERS

Soldiers and Moral Reform.

WRITING to us on this subject, an "Old Soldier," who has served in various parts of the world during a generation of years, wishes to place on record his mature convictions. He deals with the present aspects of school and home life, the dispositions of army chaplains in general, and the desecration of the Sabbath by the officers, coupled with a strong disinclination on their part to mix with the men, and the awful conditions of life for the men in the plains of India during the hot weather. These conditions include inadequacy of accommodation and bad food — factors which, more or less, foster and encourage the existing evils. The following suggestions are then presented for consideration:—

(1) Look to the growing boys in England, see that they are taught the Decalogue, and made to understand that impurity is a vile sin.

(2) Look to the recruits at depôts in England, and see that they do not forget what they have learnt as children. Establish reading libraries, coffee-shops, and recreation rooms for them. Banish to the moles and bats the regimental canteen, and insist that if men wish to have a glass of mild beer with their dinner they shall have it. Try to have rooms set apart in barracks as dining-rooms, one end being turned into reading and writing rooms. This is half the battle. I tried it, and speak from experience.

(3) Provide some profitable employment in barrack rooms in India during the hot weather; encourage men to have trades which will help them on leaving the colours; insist that officers shall give up more time to the men of an afternoon and evening; insist that soldiers' homes be established in every cantonment in India.

(4) Try to put a stop to the desecration of Sundays in India by officers and men.

(5) Punish by stringent enactments men and women who are diseased, and turn the latter out of cantonments; establish a colony for such people, where they may be supervised, influenced for good, and taught the Word of God. Every soldier convicted of a specific disease should have a regimental entry in his defaulters' book.

(6) Try to induce Government to provide kinder and better doctors than the present run of Army surgeons. Anything more objectionable than their manner of speaking to and treating soldiers is difficult to describe. It makes one's blood boil at times. A good and kindly Army doctor who took an interest in the men would be a power for good. An unfeeling lieut.-colonel or major of the R.A.M.C. is the source of untold mischief and harm.

(7) Induce godly ladies to come out to India and look after the men, and induce Government to provide good nurses in all military hospitals.

New Seamen's Institute for London.—A new Missions to Seamen Institute for the use of sailors frequenting the Port of London was opened last week in the Tidal Basin Road, Victoria Docks. This makes the third Institute maintained by the Society in the Port of London, each one being either opposite or adjacent to a Board of Trade shipping office, as the Society aims at reaching the men directly they are paid off from their ships. The new Institute opened last week, which is only a temporary building, was formerly a public-house, but was purchased by the Missions to Seamen from the Sailors' and Firemen's Union, and the cost, including fittings and furnishing, has been about £1,000.

International S.S. Lessons.

FRUITS OF RIGHT AND WRONG DOING.

Mal. iii. 13 to iv. 6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Gal. vi. 7.

INTRODUCTORY.

RECALL last week's lesson about Malachi. In to-day's lesson we have the contrast between the wicked and the righteous: first as they seem in this world, and then as they will be hereafter. What men think about them, and what God thinks about them. All in this world are divided into two classes. What did Jesus say about this? (Luke xi. 23.) Press home the question, To which of these classes do I belong? There is no such thing as belonging to neither (1 Kings xviii. 21). It will not do to imitate the people in Elijah's time.

THE UNGODLY (iii. 13-15.

God's complaint. "You have spoken hard and impudent words about Me" (refer to Psa. lxxiii. 11 and 12; Jude 15); and they said, "When did we say it?" Also, "What is the good of serving God and attending to his ordinances? We are poorer and worse off than those who are ungodly; they get rich and have jolly lives, while we are poor and miserable." This has been the complaint of others (see Job. xxi. 15; Ps. lxxiii. 3, 4). In the present day wicked men seem to prosper, because they can lie and cheat, and get gain in bad ways; but it will not last. We saw last week how these Jews had served God (ch. i. 13; ii. 17). Their was no true religion of love—not of the heart, only outside show—and God could not bless them. There is a great deal of this outside religion in these days. (Explain what true religion is,

THE GODLY, iii. 16, 17.)

The Lord knows those who truly love—those who are Christians in heart, and not only in name. He listens as his children talk about Him one to another (Matt. xviii., 19, 20). (Does He ever hear us talk about Him and all He has done for us?) God never forgets. The Persian kings kept records of all good deeds done to them. (Recall about Mordecai, Est. vi. 1, 2; Ezra iv. 15.) So God is said to keep a book. (Refer to Ex. xxxii. 32; Ps. lvi. 8, lxix. 28; Isa. lxv. 6; Dan. vii. 10; Luke ix. 20; Phil. iv. 3; Rev. xx. 12). Is my name written in God's Book of Life? Three characteristics of God's children: Fearing God—i.e., loving Him so much that we fear to grieve Him; thinking about God; and talking about Him. Let us test ourselves by this. Dwell upon God's care of his own; like jewels taken out of the earth, polished and cut, kept in a jewel-case, or placed in a crown and carefully guarded. (Describe the crown jewels, or a lady's jewel-case.)

THE FUTURE OF BOTH CLASSES (iii. 18-iv. 3).

In the sure future, "The day cometh," when the difference will be seen by all. Remember what Jesus taught in his parables: "Let both grow together until the harvest" (Matt. xiii. 30, 49), and compare Matt. xxv. 31-46.) The judgments came upon the ungodly Jews in the fearful Syrian wars during the second century before Christ, and afterwards in the Roman invasions and destruction of Jerusalem; but there is a still future meaning, even the great Judgment Day. Verse 1 describes the doom of the wicked and those who are hypocrites; verses 2 and 3 the blessings of the righteous.

JESUS, THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The sun is the source of light, life, power, comfort, joy, beauty, and glory. Sunshine is the great disease-killer and health-giver. The sunny side of the house is the healthiest: the patients on the sunny side of the hospital ward get well first. So Jesus is "the light of the world" (John viii. 12), and gives life (John x. 10), power (Matt. xxviii. 18), comfort (John xiv. 1, 16), joy (John xvi. 24), glory (John xvii. 22). (See also Luke i. 78; Eph. v. 14; 2 Pet. ii. 19; Rev. ii. 28). When Jesus shines into our heart, He soon drives out all evil.

PREPARATION FOR CHRIST'S COMING (iv. 4-6).

Obedience to God's law, and listening to God's messengers. "The day of the Lord" is the day when He appears on the earth. To the Jews it meant the coming of the Messiah; to us, when He comes again. "Elijah" was represented in John the Baptist (Matt. xi. 14-17; Mark ix. 11-13). We know that, when the Saviour came, the Jews were not prepared to receive Him, and they said: "His blood be on us and on our children." The "curse" came on them. Jesus has borne the curse for us. He has obeyed God's law for us, and borne our punishment. If we take Him for our own Saviour and trust Him, we get the blessing. The Old Testament ends with the word "curse." Christ's first teaching was "blessed" (Matt. v. 3). Here and in the New Testament we have Moses, Elijah, and Jesus together. Am I ready? (Matt. xxiv. 42.)

ITS WORK AND URGENT NEED.

THE EMPTY CUPBOARD.

The Shelter Officer's heart was breaking at having to say "No;" but the law prevented her from even agreeing to the plea of "Let us in, if it's only to stand up all night." Out in the icy rain was the poor, bedraggled mother, with four tiny mites of children clinging to her skirts. Three hours later, the Officer stumbled, in the blinding storm, over an object on the sodden pathway. New York Notes.

DR. STORRS, one of the most noted living preachers in the country, yesterday resigned the pastorate of the Church of Pilgrims, in Brooklyn, after a wonderfully successful term of no less that 53 years. His seventy-eighth birthday was celebrated a short time ago, and he has always been a very active and vigorous worker. The letter of resignation was read by Dr. Edwin B. Coe, who has been supplying Dr. Storrs's pulpit for several weeks. The doctor asks that his resignation be accepted, and a new pastor selected. He is willing to act as pastor emeritus if the church desires it, but says he will sympathetically approve any action the members choose to take. Dr. Storrs has always stood by the "old" theology, and steadfastly worked along the lines of orthodoxy. He may be regarded as the first minister to make Congregationalism successful in Brooklyn. Three years ago, at his golden anniversary, a purse of 50,000 dols. (£10,000) was presented to him; and at a public meeting at the Academy of Music, General Stewart L. Woodford (our Minister at Madrid at the outbreak of the recent war) presided, and Seth Low (President of Columbia University) and Joseph H. Choate (now Ambassador in London) made addresses. The doctor's last public appearance was at Boston in September, when he presided over the International Convention of Congregationalists, and delivered a brilliant closing address on "The Permanent Motive for Missionary Work."

Yesterday afternoon (November 19), Dr. Lem G. Broughton, of Atlanta, delivered an eloquent address on the Bible at the Cooper Union. His text was Psalm cxix. 105: "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." He began by observing that every man had or made something by which he guided his conduct. The man who went by reason in matters connected with the Bible was a dangerous man; but even more dangerous, in the doctor's estimation, was the man who set his "conscience" above the Bible. He declared that "conscience" was largely a matter of training, and that it was like a clock, which must be regulated directly or indirectly by the sun, in order to preserve its reliability. No man should make his conscience the court of last resort. That should be the Word of God—"To the law and to the testimony!" And this every time.

The particular passage that God had used to impress upon Him the absolute necessity of the help and illumination of the Holy Spirit in understanding the Bible was 1 Corinthians ii. 9, 10: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." He had been shown that, not by reason, or learning, or study, or books—excellent as all these might be in themselves—were the treasures of the Bible to be revealed, but by the light of the Holy Spirit Himself. He illustrated his point by a graphic description of a visit to the celebrated cave in Luray, Virginia. He was in the city to preach, and during the afternoon was invited to see this celebrated cave. "I went with a friend and a guide. The latter gave us two small candles, and we went down into the earth. After proceeding some distance, through gloom and darkness, during which I could see nothing but a few rocks and stones, I got rather tired, and suggested going back. 'No,' said the guide, 'don't go back. You've paid a dollar to see the cave, and you ought not to go back till you have had your money's worth!' 'All right,' I said, 'I'll go through with the thing now I've started!' In a short time the guide stopped, and said, 'This is a splendid place—a most beautiful place!' I could not see very much, except a rocky pillar here and there, and a rock sticking up over yonder; so I remarked that I was glad to hear it, as I would not have been aware of the fact if he had not mentioned it. The guide then took a coil of magnesium ribbon out of his pocket, and lighted the end of it with my little candle. Then I saw the marvellous beauty of the cave, and the stalactites and the stalagmites, and heard a lady playing a tune on certain crystals that had fallen from the roof. I was delighted—enchanted. Presently the ribbon came near being burnt out, and I said, 'Light another one!' 'But it will cost you a dollar!' 'Go ahead and light it!' And he lit it, and then another, and another, till I had spent four or five dollars in gazing upon the marvellous splendours and manifold beauties of that cave. So, when the magnesium ribbon of God's Spirit comes down and touches the little candles of our intellects, then it illuminates the Bible, and we see glories and treasures and beauties that cannot be seen at all except by its aid."

ROGER MARTIN.

DEMILL INSTITUTE.

emill Ladies' College.

IN a recent issue we gave an illustration of the College, St. Catharine's, Ontario, before it was destroyed by fire. We now give one showing the building, which has been secured by the trustees for the continuation of the work. It will be remembered that the cost of this building was £6,000, and of this sum £4,000 remains to be paid. The College is undenominational, and caters especially for those who have been placed in convent schools, and such as are likely to be placed in them, by charging as low fees as they do.

Mr. Demill writes that he has so far received from English friends amounts making a total of £317. He says he is required back at the College, but he is unwilling to return until he has raised funds sufficient to relieve the trustees from burden in regard to the building. The premises have been procured at a low price, and are well adapted for the work, but he desires that they should not be lost through money not being forthcoming.

Mr. Demill's address is still 4, Grove Road, Redland, Bristol.

Dynevor Indian Hospital,

MANITOBA, CANADA.

TWO years ago we visited the Indian Hospital, St. Peter's, Manitoba, Canada. It was then in an early stage of existence, but many improvements have since taken place.

In the third annual Report we read of Dr. and Mrs. Rolston, the pioneers of the work, having accepted a position in Vancouver while on a much needed furlough in that island. Their retirement would have checked the work, had not God in due time sent another of his children to fill the vacant place. Miss M. L. Lockhart is a graduate of the Royal United Hospital, Bath, and was at one time deaconess in the parish of Wembley, Middlesex. Wishing to devote her life to Christian work among Indians, she was led to accept the call for voluntary service at the Dynevor Hospital, little knowing how arduous was the task that awaited her there. Relying upon God's promises for strength, however, she undertook to reorganize the hospital, and, with the help of Miss Phair, daughter of Archdeacon Phair, and with the medical assistance of Dr. Ross and others from Selkirk, Manitoba, she was able to carry on the work most efficiently, though very much to the injury of her own health. There were times when she was not only the lady-principal, but also the medical superintendent, day-and-night attendant, also charwoman, general servant, and devoted nurse—all in one. At present she has two valuable helpers in Mrs. Troop, mother of a minister at Montreal, and Miss Scott, from Winnipeg, both ladies having offered their help free of charge—the former as matron and housekeeper, the latter as assistant in nursing. Two Indian sisters complete the staff.

Considering the inconveniences of a house that has not been built for the present purpose, and that everything is being done on the premises, this valiant little army of Jesus Christ is doing more than its share of work.

The wards contain twelve beds, which are almost constantly occupied. Scores come from outside to seek help. Since the Indian mothers have discovered, while watching under the windows of the hospital in a temperature of forty below zero, that their little ones were not only well treated, but also made happy, they are losing their dread of the place where they are "experimented upon."

From August 5, 1898, until April 29, 1899, 39 patients had been taken in; 568 dispensary patients, some coming from a long distance, dealt with; 75 out-patients visited; three midwifery cases attended, and over 1,000 prescriptions dispensed. Also a Christmas dinner was provided for 62 old men and women.

At the second annual meeting of the Dynevor Indian Hospital Ladies' Aid Society, on April 29, which was presided over by the Primate of all Canada, the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, Mr. W. Redford Mulock, the devoted hon. secretary and treasurer, proposed the erecting of a farm in the Reserve, with the view of promoting agriculture among Indians.

The committee possesses a parcel of land 350 acres in extent, consisting of arable and grass land, which could be made use of. As a natural result of this enterprise, the hospital would be provided with milk, cream, and all the eatables necessary, and the missionary work would be furthered by having this farm managed by a Christian farmer, who would be a co-worker with the staff. The necessity of a separate building for the nurses was also seriously considered.

The amount required for the two enterprises is 4,000dols. The need is laid before the Lord, who loves the cheerful giver. Friends in Canada, and also a few in England, have hitherto generously helped the work. We trust that they will increase in number.

The Indian Famine.

IN a letter to the Bombay Guardian, Rev. Eric Lewis (of the Kurku Mission, Bhaisdehi, Betul District, C.P.) says:

"The condition of the country is terrible. A fortnight ago I rode eight miles eastwards to see the Government famine relief work on the new road from Betul to Ellichpur. Everywhere the crops are thin and withering, and producing little or nothing. I found 2,200 people on the road, the men earning eight pice and the women six a day. Happily they are not yet emaciated, and there was then no sickness among them. Seventy children were being fed twice a day on kedgeree; they received a very good allowance, cooked by a Brahmin cook, and looked well and happy. The adults all told the same tale—'we had to leave our villages because there was neither food nor work.' A week later news reached me that the number at work had increased to 4,000. I understand that there are five such road works now in active progress in this one district of Betul; and the Deputy Commissioner tells me that south of us along the edge of Berar things are worse still. There is scarcely any water, and the people say they are 'drinking mud,' and this in the beginning of October!

"The Government has happily begun relief work early in the famine, and are doing a great deal in the way of providing work for the people. Those who are within fifteen miles of a large road work can go there for work; those who do not care to do so can cut grass in the jungle and receive grain for it. Hundreds are daily cutting grass in this neighbourhood, men, women, and children, and the Government is stacking it, hoping next hot season, when all fodder fails, to be able thereby to keep many cattle alive. In addition, our village tank is being deepened, and the deepening of wells will be one of the main forms of relief in villages distant from the road works. In the Milghat I hear that there is a large programme for the making of village roads. All this is good, and we are thankfully doing whatever we can to support the Government in these measures; but there is one thing which to our regret the Government shrinks from tackling, and which appears to us to be the very core and marrow of the evil, viz.: the power of the corn merchants to raise the price of grain indefinitely by combination.

"May I close with an appeal for immediate help for a large village, Chicholi, only two miles away, which has been almost burnt to the ground? Out of 113 houses only twenty-three escaped, the people saving only their cattle and household ware, and some not even that. It was the most prosperous village anywhere near us, and the people, chiefly farmers, had stores of grain—some small, some large—in their houses, most of which must have been destroyed. There are some specially sad cases of families who were out at work at a distance when the fire occurred, who have saved nothing. The poor people are now camping on their ruined houses."

Mrs. J. C. Lawson, of the American Methodist Mission, Aligarh, N.W., writing on November 6, heads her letter, "In Camp, Gurgaon District." The famine here is quite as bad as in the Rajputana districts; indeed, the accounts which reach us daily are heartrending. With such wholesale distress prevalent, it becomes necessary to organize and systematize the relief given, and to specialize, as it were, among the immense population in the distribution of work and alms. Mrs. Lawson and her colleagues are devoting their attention exclusively to the widows and children. Only £2 10s. is required to support a widow for a year. Already Mrs. Lawson has managed to send sixty-seven helpless starving women and children. It is sad to see stalwart men begging for work at six pice a day; the women get four pice.

The War in South Africa.

From De Aar.

WE lately sent you a line to say we were opening a Soldiers' Home here.

We had nearly 300 present the first night, and still more each succeeding night, but we greatly need two large marquees—one for meetings and one for refreshments. The officer commanding is most sympathetic, but they have not tents enough for themselves. It made our hearts ache to see the dear men on the opening night. The home is in a back yard, of course in the open air, which would not matter but for three almost daily visitations, wind, dust, rain. We have always wind, and the changes are rung on dust and rain. At four o'clock we could not see the camp, only 200 yards away, for dust; at six, a heavy thunderstorm broke over us.

Some of the men crowded into what shelter they could find. We called out to the several score left, who just lurched their shoulders and turned their backs to the rain, "Run for your camp!" "We are sick of the camp; we had rather get wet here than be dry there." And they sat it out till first post. We cannot decide which is the worst, the rain or dust. Most of the men are "as hard as nails" by now; but the reinforcements expected this week will suffer.

There is to be a permanent camp here, but we shall go where most needed, till the war is over. We should be glad to have books, papers, magazines, carriage paid to care of the Station-master, De Aar.

Help for the Wounded.

Admiral Sir Leopold McClintock, chairman of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society, writes to us appealing for help to maintain a Scripture Reader at the Cape of Good Hope, to visit the Naval Hospital and the many men-of-war that have no chaplain. Strong naval brigades have been sent to the front, whence many wounded are already returning who will need spiritual as well as bodily comfort. The cause, Sir Leopold remarks, must touch the hearts of all who desire the moral and spiritual welfare of our seamen and marines. Contributions may be addressed either to Admiral McClintock, K.C.B., or to Colonel M. H. Farquharson, secretary, 112, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

Missionaries and the War.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke writes from the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.:—"Among the letters read at the last meeting of the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society was a very pathetic one from the well-known missionary Rev. Charles Phillips, of Johannesburg, who has been compelled to leave his work among the coloured people in the Transvaal owing to the war. He said: 'It is sad to think of the complete scattering of the work which with so much toil and effort had been gathered together. . . . We are now houseless and homeless, as well as churchless, and can hardly predict our movements for a single day. We feel very anxious about our church buildings, as well as about many other things, but we can only leave all in the Divine hands. May the darkness soon pass and the true light shine again on our troubled land.' The Emergency Fund has now reached £530."

A Timely Gift.

The small Bible issued by the Oxford University Press in diamond 32mo., has become so well known that but little needs to be said in recommendation of it. But to meet a special need at this time, it is issued bound in khaki for the use of soldiers abroad. A special edition, called the "Knapsack" Bible, will be found by friends interested in our military forces just the thing to send out to the field. It is supplied at 2s. 6d., post free, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

"Cleanse the Lepers."

AFTER an existence of twenty-five years, the Mission to Lepers in India and the East bears unmistakable evidence of the abundant blessing which God has given on the work, carried out in compliance with the Great Commission. When it is remembered that in the countries where this society ministers there are at least a million lepers, many thousands of these homeless wanderers, no apology for such an institution is required. Dependent upon casual doles of food, which their mutilated fingers are scarcely able to pick up, with caste broken and heart breaking, the leper is too often turned adrift from home and friends to beg his bread or perish by the wayside. From these rings the chilling cry, "Unclean!" which is heeded by few except those who have gone forth to soothe and succour, in the name of the Great Healer, these pitiable and forsaken creatures.

The Mission was founded in 1874, and at a gathering in Exeter Hall on Thursday last, in commemoration of the semi-jubilee, reports full of interest and encouragement were given. Sir Charles Elliot, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, expressed his warm sympathy with the mission. He related his experiences in India, depicting heartrending scenes and the appalling effects of this loathsome disease.

Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey spoke on "The Progress and Present Position of the Work," and gave touching instances of the suffering and misery alleviated through the efforts of the missionaries. Twenty-one asylums and fourteen children's homes are now supported by the Society, as well as grants being made to eleven other leper homes. During the twenty-five years the Society, had been in existence, some £90,000 has been spent for the lepers in India, China, and Japan. Mrs. Osborne, of Trevandrum, gave her experience of mingled joy and pain among the lepers and their children. The "old, old story" had been received with gladness: "Tell us again of that home where we shall be made whole." The untainted children are sheltered and educated in the Christian faith, and thus rescued from physical and moral danger. There was an exhibition of lime-light views by Mr. J. Jackson, deputation secretary.

Hebrew Conference Hall.

THE work of Mr. Herman Ehrlich among the Jews at Whitechapel continues to flourish, in spite of many difficulties and much opposition. One by one, men and women from God's ancient people are brought to know Christ as Saviour and Lord. The work has been silently but steadily progressing for thirty-eight years, and there is great cause for thankfulness when it is recollected how much has been accomplished. The centre of operations is the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague Street, E.

In the report for the past year, Mr. Ehrlich gives not only details of his work, which are full of interest, but he describes in brief the observance of the Day of Atonement and New Year's Day. The life of the Ghetto is remarkable, and Mr. Ehrlich's notes will be read with pleasure. Copies of the report from the missionary at 95, King Edward Road, South Hackney, N.E.

To the Chinese Interior.

WRITING on September 19 from Kueilin, Rev. Louis Byrde (C.M.S.) informs us that he has moved there from Wuchow, the new treaty port, 200 miles up the West River. The journey occupied in all thirty-seven days, much longer than it should have done; partly due to the captain of the boat taking the opportunity to smuggle a cargo of salt, &c.

Kueilin, which was reached on June 15, is a capital with 200,000 people. Upon arriving, the officials sent to know the business of the missionaries, and later, two runners to look after them; and though not sent away, the missionaries have, so far, been unable to make any headway. At the time of writing they were still living on their boat, anchored near the east gate of the city, and two Alliance missionaries are in a similar position, inhabiting a boat alongside.

The authorities would seem to be against the missionaries, for though they are often able to see a house, they get no opportunity of taking it. Prayers are earnestly asked that God will open this last capital city of China, that the Gospel may speedily be proclaimed within its walls.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 10. Ezra x.

IT was, without doubt, a very grievous sin. The people had acted in direct violation of the express commandment of God, and nothing would tend to hinder the testimony and impede the influence of the chosen people more fatally than this intermarriage with heathen and strange women. We know how perniciously the counterpart of this reacts on the children of households, where believers and unbelievers are unequally yoked together.

At the same time Ezra's measures were very drastic, and the weight of suffering must have fallen very heavily on the poor wives and mothers, divorced from their husbands, and separated from their children. In missionary policy one would rather follow the wise counsels given by the Apostle to the Corinthians (1 Cor. vii. 12-16).

It must have required a large amount of courage for Ezra to take the course he did. The matter certainly "belonged" unto him, but many a man would have flinched. Probably, however, the way was made easier for him by his very deep and evident concern. He took the sin of the people home to himself, as though it were his own, and they respected him for doing so. There is nothing that so moves people as to see another moved for their shortcomings and sins, and they will bear almost anything from one whose motive is transparently pure. Would that our hearts were as sensitive as Ezra's, and that we could induce in others, through our tears, a trembling on account of sin!

MONDAY, December 11. Neh. i.

Nehemiah had several brothers; but to Hanani, who was a faithful man and feared the Lord above many (vii. 2), the conspicuous honour was given of inciting him to undertake the work of his life. It was as though Hanani, having seen the dilapidations of Jerusalem, and being unable to combat with the tremendous difficulties of the position, resolved to do what he could in stirring up his brother, who held a lucrative and influential position under the King of Persia. He reminds us of Andrew, the brother of Peter, and may be likened to one of those "joints" to which the Apostle refers, which cannot do much themselves, but act as pivots on which the more important members revolve. You may be only a tiny taper, but you may ignite a beacon-fire which will cast its glow over a county.

Nehemiah was manifestly a master in the art of prayer. He prayed day and night, as though the Almighty had called him to share with Him some of the pressure of his own burden. Finney records instances of godly men and women who became so burdened with the weight of perishing sinners that they could neither eat nor drink, and went to their pastors under the pressure of an uncontrollable anxiety. In all such cases revival has immediately followed. Is not this one element in the fellowship of Christ's sufferings?

With his intercessions the good Nehemiah mingled vicarious confession. His people were not convicted of their sins as he was, so he assumed the position taken by Daniel years before, and poured out a heart full of tears, confessions, and lamentations. Perhaps Christian people might save their country in their own day if they would begin to copy this pious man in standing between God and their country's national sins.

TUESDAY, December 12. Neh ii.

In this beautiful instance of the power of ejaculatory prayer, the prayer which is shot up into heaven as an arrow from a bow, or a stone from a catapult, let us remember the spirit of prayer which preceded it, and had long pervaded Nehemiah's soul. It was because he prayed day and night with tears that his soul was able in that moment of fear to poise itself, and mount into the presence of God. It is impossible to pray without ceasing, unless we have set times for entering our closet and praying to our Father who is in secret.

In after days, Nehemiah was wont to speak of the hand of his God, which was good upon him (8, 18). And surely at that moment, when the whole of his life-work was in suspense, when he was guided in what to say, and do, and ask, the pressure of that tender, wise, and strong hand was very manifestly upon him. Oh, that we might always live, realizing that our hands are made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob!

The hand of God must also have been upon that heathen king. Though he knew it not, he was being guided. His proposal to send Nehemiah to see to the rebuilding of the city, to give direction that he should be furnished with materials, were all due to the arrangement of a loving and wise Providence. We do not know how much those hands may not be doing for us, in unlocking gates, of which we have only to turn the handle, or gently push them open.

The words which Nehemiah brought greatly encouraged the builders. "They strengthened their hands for the good work." Ah, how wonderful is the heart-cheer which the man of God may bring to the depressed and downhearted, when he comes straight from his Master's presence-chamber.

WEDNESDAY, December 13. Neh. iii.

The building of the wall was conducted on the most masterly principles of sanctified common-sense. That in many cases each should repair over against his house; that daughters should have a share in it, as well as sons; that their names should be identified with the piece of wall that the different builders erected; that the strength of each should be directed towards one length, for which he alone was responsible—was excellent. There is no principle so likely to get the most work possible out of Christian workers as to give them direct responsibility. Entrust a piece of wall-building to a man, and there is no energy he will not expend, no lengths to which he will not go, to show himself worthy of your trust.

Alas that the nobles did not put their necks to the Lord's work! The temptations of a rich man are many, and notably this, that he will endeavour to accomplish by proxy what he should do by his personal exertions. In contrast with these is that word "earnestly," appended to Baruch's efforts. "He earnestly repaired." It is interesting to note this minute characterization of the several workers. Probably angel watchers are remarking our contributions to the walls of the New Jerusalem, and the way in which we make them; and angel scribes are recording the result, whether gold, silver, and precious stones, or wood, hay, and stubble. Some day we shall be, perhaps, permitted to see the little bit of construction we were enabled to put into the City of God. Let each man take heed how he buildeth. If any man's work shall abide, he shall receive a reward. On the foundation-stones were the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb. How little they thought that they were building into it such precious jewels!

THURSDAY, December 14. Neh. iv.

Whenever the walls of Jerusalem rise above the ground, and threaten to become formidable, the world is very wroth. Then all that venomous spite can do is done. Then to sarcasm are added misrepresentation and force. But, again, Nehemiah met his opponents with excellent common-sense. "We made our prayer and set a watch." Surely this suggested Oliver Cromwell's famous motto, "Trust in God, and keep your powder dry."

To the opposition from without was added the faint-heartedness of friends. "Judah said" . . . And there was an appeal from lone farmhouses in country districts, that they should not be left deserted, but that their heads should return to them from the metropolis to defend them in case of attack. But Nehemiah knew that he had a work to do for God, and he did it.

His words were highly encouraging and inspiring. "Be not afraid," he cried; "remember the Lord"—words which recall those of the Apostle, "Remember Jesus Christ . . . risen from the dead." His arrangements were excellent: that each of the workers who could, held the sword in one hand, while he used the other for removing the rubbish and for other necessary service. The builders who were required to use both hands had their swords girded at their sides. This is good for us all to ponder. The sword in one hand, the trowel in the other. Building up the walls, conjoined to fighting in their defence; the constructive and the defensive; watching unto prayer, and edifying one another in all holy living and godliness. Ah! Christian workers, watch and pray; when ye are most absorbed in building God's church, ye are most exposed to personal assaults of the evil one. Ye are not ignorant of his devices, therefore care for yourselves as well as your work; mind that your service should not only consist in building up the saints, but in defending our most holy faith.

FRIDAY, December 15. Neh. v.

Nehemiah was a kind of Tribune of the People. He had their cause at heart, and did not scruple to state their wrongs in the plainest words, and claim redress. It is an important matter for a man of God to identify himself with the needs and wrongs of the oppressed, and to raise his voice on their behalf.

There was at the same time great aptness at conciliation displayed in his address to the nobles. He pointed out how unreasonable it was that Jews should endeavour to bring back Jews to the slavery in which even heathen monarchs did not hold them. He summoned them before the bar of God. He stood on their level, and said, "Let us leave off this usury." What wonder that he carried his point.

His service was remarkably free from the charge of personal aggrandisement. He refused to be chargeable on the people whom he governed. He says, "So did not I, because of the fear of God." What an example for us all! It was, of course, perfectly legitimate for him to take his maintenance; but he was desirous, for God's sake, and for the sake of the people, to put his service beyond the reach of detractors. In this he reminds us of the great Apostle, who steadfastly maintained his right to receive the personal gifts of his converts, but as steadfastly refused to exercise that right. (1 Cor. ix.)

SATURDAY, December 16. Neh. vi.

How Satan will annoy and tempt a good man! Here was an apparently harmless proposal to meet in one of the villages of the plain. And when that plot failed, an effort was made to defame Nehemiah's character by the scandalous expedient of the open letter. This being exploded, an attempt was made to entice God's servant to show an unworthy care for his life. But who is there of us that is not conscious of attacks just as insidious and malicious? The bitter things that David says of his enemies are all true of the hosts of wicked spirits that seek to turn us from our allegiance and loyalty to God.

But what noble answers Nehemiah gave! First, the demands of his work: "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." No, Christian man, engaged in God's high service, summoned to it by a heavenly calling, you must never go down from its holy level.

Next, the perfect transparency of an upright soul. "There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them." The words of a little child have often made bad men give back. A ray of light will disperse evildoers more readily than a posse of soldiers. Be just, and fear not.

And lastly, the sense of self-respect. "Should such a man as I flee?" I, who have been chosen before the world was made, who have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, who have been designated to so high an office! Let others flee, if they must; but sooner might this rock budge than I. "Here I stand, I can do no other. So help me, God." It is not lawful for a man to sin against his conscience.

But he who is as a rock before man, bows low enough in the presence of his God. In his lonely hours you overhear him in prayer, as Luther before his appearance in the Diet of Worms. So Nehemiah turns from man to God, with the cry, Remember.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

SEVENTH WEEK OF GENERAL MEETINGS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE large attendance at the monthly Conference of the Glasgow Christian Workers' Union was a fresh proof of the widespread interest in spiritual things. A wet morning did not prevent the hall from being crowded to the door. The Evangelistic Campaign was uppermost in the thoughts of all; and when the chairman (Mr. A. B. MUNRO, President of the Union) presented an unusual request for prayer, there was an outburst of responsive enthusiasm all through the gathering. The request was on behalf of a young woman who had been spoken to at one of the meetings during the previous week, and whose reply was that she would rather be lost than be like many of the professing Christians whom she knew.

The subject was "The Joy of the Lord," and Mr. ANDREW FERRIE, in a deeply spiritual and helpful address, enumerated: I. Joys which the Lord gives but does not share—(1) of forgiveness; (2) of mastery over self and sin; (3) of knowing his fellowship continually. II. Joys which the Lord shares—(1) of sonship; (2) of self-sacrifice; (3) of winning souls. On the last point he told of a touching experience which a worker had passed through during the week. After conversation in one church a lad of sixteen yielded himself to the Lord, and his name and address were noted. The next spoken to was a girl of thirteen, who also proved to be ripe for the Kingdom, and the name and address proved her to be the sister of the first trophy of grace. A few minutes afterwards a boy of eleven was led into the light, and again the same name and address were given. Tears came into Mr. Ferrie's eyes as he pictured the joy of such work, and the joy in the home represented by the young people.

Mr. WILLIAM M. OATTS spoke a farewell word to the workers, and specially pointed out the importance of not allowing even evangelistic work to draw them away from continual prayer for blessing on the city during the continuance of the Campaign.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL.

In the evening St. Andrew's Hall was again crowded, and hundreds of people were turned from the doors. In his report, afterwards, Mr. MCNEILL testified to the joy he had experienced. The great audience had, he declared, a distinct West-endy complexion; and he had also a most cheering testimony about the apparent preparedness for the Gospel of great numbers. We are constantly hearing of men and women who, without passing through the vital change, or being restored from conscious or outstanding backsliding, yet speak with the warmest gratitude of uplifting and help received in the Christian life.

Mr. McNeill has no stereotyped methods, and since the large hall was both unsuitable and unavailable, a little to the surprise of many who were present it was found that preparations had been made for an after-meeting in an adjacent church (Berkeley Street United Presbyterian, of which Rev. G. L. Carstairs is minister). Some workers were in doubt whether the leaving of one building and seeking another for the purpose of being dealt with personally were not too great a test to which to subject any whose hearts had been touched. But the Spirit of God had been at work, and the Word had gone too deep to be so easily quenched. Over a score of persons boldly sought the church, and Mr. McNeill was again the leader of the gathering. A worker of long experience testified afterward that the Spirit of prayer was poured out in a special manner, and that God's people had a singular sense of refreshment in soul and of encouragement in the present work.

It is now intended to continue the Sabbath evening services in St. Andrew's Hall as a permanent centre connected with the Campaign.

MR. M'NEILL IN THE EAST END.

The base of operations in the district of Calton has now been changed to the United Presbyterian Church in Kirk Street, of which Rev. Robert Campbell is minister. Following up the work of Rev. John Macintosh (Motherwell) in the Congregational Church close by, to which we directed attention last week, Mr. McNeill is finding that here, as elsewhere, the soil has been well prepared through the ministry of the Word and constant open-air work. The church is surrounded by houses, which early in the century formed part of what was then an old village, long since absorbed by city extension. The neighbourhood is largely peopled by the poorer working-classes, with a large Roman Catholic element.

Besides the minister of the congregation, Major Colquhoun (Corsica), Mr. P. B. Bryce, Rev. William Halliday (Congregational Church), and Rev. William Mackintosh were among the helpers taking part in the opening meeting. A season of prayer was led by the ministers present; and a new and attractive element was introduced through the presentation of the Gospel in song by Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, who is well known as a fellow-labourer with Mr. McNeill at the Royal Albert Hall, London, and other missions.

Mr. McNeill assured the audience that he felt a grand beginning had been made; but he pointed out that, though the meeting was a large one, there was room in the church for more. "'Out of nothing, nothing comes,' and even the Lord can do nothing in an empty pew, while, if a man had been in it, a soul might have been saved." After a word of encouragement to the open-air workers, it was pointed out that there were very many who could not sing, and dared not stand at a corner on a damp evening. On these, also, the burden of the vacant pews was laid to see that they were filled, not by Christians, but by the unsaved, sought out and invited personally and warmly. Above all, the need of much prayer was emphasized. "Keep praying. Prayer is the nerve in our strength, the bone in our sleeve. Without prayer it is an empty sleeve; but, with prayer, we have the arm of the Lord in the midst. Keep praying during the day; but keep praying, too, while we preach—that the word in season may be sent home to the hearts of the hearers."

This gifted preacher keeps sounding the Gospel from the New Testament stories he loves so well, and the reception they receive proves that the people never tire of them either. Monday's address was based on the story of "The Man with the Withered Hand" (Mark iii. 1-6), on which we had heard him speak not long before; but there was no suggestion of the repetition of an old sermon or address. Fresh presentations of the truth are given every time from the old themes; and from these lips the Word proves itself over again to be a living spring of the Water of Life, perennially fresh and powerful.

At the close those were called for who had definitely decided to trust in the Lord Jesus, and about ten responded. After being commended to the keeping of the Lord, they were faithfully counselled against ever putting that new hand they had received again to dirty work, but to use it for Christ. Mr. McNeill explained that it was not desired to have a formal after-meeting, but to allow an opportunity for friendly conversation, and those who were setting out in the new way were especially invited to put themselves into touch with the ministers and other workers in charge.

IN THE NORTHERN DISTRICTS.

After labouring with success on the south side of the River Clyde, Pastor D. G. Forbes (of America) was last week located in John Knox Street Baptist Church (Rev. P. J. Rollo), which is situated in the vicinity of Glasgow Prison. Good and hearty meetings, both in the open air and indoors, were obtained, the attendance of a large number of children being a noteworthy feature.

On the occasion of our visit on Tuesday evening, Mr. J. R. D. McAusland had come to help by his attractive solo-singing, and the hush among old and young alike gave evidence of the spell which such a worker can be used to cast over an audience. The text for the address was found in Deut. xxxiii. 29, "Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord?" It was shown that Scripture describes as "happy" those who are tried, who endure, whom God correcteth, who find wisdom—and here, those who are saved. The blessings to God's people in the land of Israel were compared to those of the Christian life, and the blessings of dwelling in God brought out. Above all, the Saviour was presented as God's choicest gift to man.

One of the workers assured us that God had set his seal on the mission at the outset, and had granted conversions every evening. We observed a great readiness to remain to the after-meeting, not a few of the children remaining in their seats with an earnest, wistful look on their faces. The congregation had been appealed to before to see that workers were never lacking, and this had been well taken to heart. In a loving, brotherly and sisterly fashion good work was being done for eternity. The readiness of outsiders to keep their seats was accompanied by liberty of utterance granted to the workers.

The congregation of North Dundas Street Congregational Church (Rev. George Gladstone) is ever active in evangelistic, Endeavour, and temperance work, with their pastor leading and guiding. When the Campaign came within their borders last week, the meetings of Sabbath and Monday were conducted by Mr. GLADSTONE and two neighbouring ministers—Rev. DONALD CAMERON (Free St. Paul's Church) and Rev. J. WILLIAMS BUTCHER (St. John's Wesleyan Church). On Tuesday the work was taken up for the remainder of the week by Rev. T. FERRIE HULME (London), who opened with an address on the work of the Holy Spirit, which was much blessed.

On Wednesday evening we found an excellent open-air meeting, at which several students from the Bible Training Institute gave short addresses, closing with an earnest invitation to the church from Mr. Butcher. Indoors there was a large gathering, which showed a gratifying increase on the previous evening. The ministers named all took part in the service, as well as Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, the song-preacher.

The address was based on Nehemiah v. 15—"So did not I, because of the fear of the Lord"—and was mainly addressed to young men and women. The preacher gave thanks that God had previously answered prayer in granting the spirit of hearing, and as he invited those who had that evening made the great decision to rise in their seats, one and another did so; and those who were willing to inquire further were invited to meet the ministers present in an adjoining room. At the close the same "sweet spiritual influence" which had pervaded all the proceedings was felt in an after-meeting for prayer and fellowship.

PARTICK.

Since the centre of the adult work in Partick has been changed to the Free High Church (Rev. Dr. Henry Bremner), in Hamilton Crescent, the meetings have not been large, but the impression is evidently deepening in the district, and a gracious work is being done. The speaker is Rev. GEORGE HAYTON (of Annan), whose name is well known among Christian Endeavourers and other aggressive workers in the southern district of Scotland. As we entered the building last Thursday evening, we involuntarily heard part of a conversation, concluding with the emphatic assurance that God was "honouring his Word." Some who were known to be under deep conviction of sin seemed to be drawn back as by an irresistible attraction, and in the prayer meetings there was much intercession on behalf of personal friends. Among others whom we found helping were Rev. James Wallace, and Mr. A. B. Munro (Christian Workers' Union).

THE BROTHERS WEAVER.

The Brothers Weaver joined the Campaign workers at the beginning of last week, and have been conducting a mission in Free St. Mark's Church (Rev. George Milne), situated in Maine Street, Anderston. As our readers will understand, the singing of the Gospel has been having a specially prominent place at this centre; and grateful testimony is borne to abundant blessing following the presentation of the truth as it is in Jesus. A strong body of earnest working men have maintained the witness outside in the busy thoroughfare. Every evening conversions have been reported, the fact being that nearly every unconverted person who remained to an after-meeting has yielded to Christ before leaving the church. The hearts of God's people have been gladdened by the blessing night after night. Tuesday was noted for a special number finding the Saviour. On Thursday again the Lord was felt to be specially near. When Friday evening came there was a spirit of expectancy manifest throughout the audience. Mr. Bewley Weaver gave a well-timed and searching address specially to Christians. Before the meeting finally broke up, the note of praise had again come into the prayers for wanderers who had found the way home.

The distribution of other speakers during the week was as follows:—Eastpark Free Church, Maryhill, Rev. S. R. Macphail (Liverpool); Wellfield United Presbyterian Church, Springburn, Rev. M. Dickie (Sanquhar); Govan Congregational Church, Elderpark Street, Mr. A. Klein; Kinning Park Free Church, Shields Road, Mr. S. Mackenzie (of Campbeltown); Wynd Free Church, Crown Street, Rev. J. Robertson, jun. (Edinburgh).

JUVENILE MEETINGS.

Great gatherings of children continue to take place in different parts of the city. On Friday evening, Mr. Mackeith brought to a close, in Kent Road United Presbyterian Church, a week crowned with much blessing, in which he had the co-operation of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Raphael. About eight hundred children were present, chiefly between the ages of eight and thirteen, but the order was perfect. Many faces were lighted up by smiles as Mr. Mackeith suggested that this had been the happiest week in their lives; and, when he asked how many had trusted Jesus, several hundred hands were raised. These were all asked to tell their Sabbath-school teachers about their conversion without delay. A touching feature in this mission was the holding of a prayer-meeting of the boys and girls at six o'clock each evening.

The other evangelists working among the children during the week were Mr. William Thomson, jun., Mr. J. W. van de Venter, Rev. William Baird, Mr. T. M. Pratt, Mr. John Paton, Mr. John Stewart, Mr. David J. Knox. Mr. J. Corbett, Mr. T. T. Mackeith, and representatives of the Sabbath School Union.

AFTERNOON MEETINGS.

With Friday the fifth and last week of the meetings at 1 o'clock, for business men (in St. George's parish), was brought to a close. As we announced last week, it was intended at this point to make a break here in this department, in order that Mr. McNeill might turn his attention to the dinner-hour meetings in the shipyards; but those in charge could not take the responsibility of closing, even temporarily, a door which had been so manifestly opened wide by the Lord Himself. So, on Monday of this week, a new beginning was made at the same hour in Renfield Street United Presbyterian Church (Rev. Andrew Forrest). The meetings will still be strictly limited to one hour, but ladies will now be admitted, the galleries being reserved for their accommodation.

In the shipyards the same deep interest among the workmen continues, and gives promise of taking a firm and permanent hold on the community. We have heard shrewd observers say that they have never before seen such crowds of respectable men regularly gathering together to hear the Gospel; the nearest analogy seems to be the state of affairs witnessed at parliamentary elections in times of political crisis.

SPECIAL ITEMS.

The staff and students of the Bible Training Institute conducted two missions last week—taking the place of Rev. Wilson Baird in Victoria Free Church, as well as continuing in Knox Free Church.

In connection with Rev. T. Ferrier Hulme's mission in Dundas Street Congregational Church, an additional meeting was held each day at three o'clock, in order to reach a section of the surrounding population who could not attend in the evening.

In a meeting at which many had asked to be prayed for, a woman seated near the writer had made no sign; but as she remained behind, the evangelist, coming round, asked if she knew the Lord. "Yes." "How long have you known him?" "Only to-night." When talked to she was able to give a good reason for her hope. Such cases, too, are occurring on every hand.

Scottish Notes.

THE annual missionary meeting of the Glasgow Free Presbytery, held last week, gave evidence of a larger amount of interest on the part of the people than has been shown for several years. Still, Lord Overtoun (who was in the chair) felt impelled to call attention to the large numbers who, even yet, neither pray, nor give, nor go. Yet he said there were signs of the stirring of hoary heathenism, and only faithfulness and patience were required for the name of Christ to be made known in heathendom. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Adam Andrew (Chingleput), Rev. Principal Mackichan (Bombay), Rev. Dr. Young (Aden), Rev. Dr. Laws (Livingstonia), and Rev. Alexander Connell (Regent Square, London). A liberal collection was taken for the benefit of the Livingstonia Mission.

The Glasgow Benevolent Society has closed its sixty-seventh year of ministry to the suffering and distressed poor, through the missionaries and Bible women of the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Oatts were last Wednesday the recipients of a valuable parting present and a gratefully-worded address from a committee representative in a wide sense of the Christian work of Scotland.

At Edinburgh Presbytery of the Church of Scotland, last week, Rev. Mr. Brown (a minister from Johannesburg) said that there had been at least thirteen congregations broken up by the war in South Africa, and they would have to begin their work from the beginning again when the war ceased. Two of these were in Natal, three in the Free State, with eight in the Transvaal (four at Johannesburg and one at Pretoria); and he thought he might add the one at Buluwayo as a fourteenth.

On the suggestion of the Working Men and Women's Christian Sabbath Society, the Edinburgh Presbytery has agreed to bring pressure to bear on the Town Council that additional Parliamentary powers may be obtained for dealing with the opening of ice-cream shops on the Sabbath and with betting on the streets. The Christian Sabbath Society is also showing activity, by special lectures and otherwise, in educating public opinion on the subject.

Protection of Young Girls.—The work of the Princess Louise Home continues its useful course. Many young girls have been rescued from evil surroundings, trained, and placed out in situations. At present there are more than a hundred cases in the Institution. Every effort is made to finance the Home by means of laundry work. Some necessary additions have been made to the buildings, but the society's resources are now exhausted. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Richard M. Harvey, 32, Sackville Street, W.

Liverpool.—Just now, at "The Strangers' Rest," 24, Park Lane, we very much need the help of earnest Christians to talk and sing with sailors or emigrants, and to try to win them for Christ, specially in Spanish, French, Italian, Finn, and German languages. Of course, English workers are most welcome. Any Christian friends, either living in our city or travelling through our port, who could help, would be welcomed any Sunday at the workers' tea and prayer meeting, 5 to 6 o'clock, at "The Rest;" or, if they would write to me, we might arrange meetings.—(Miss) Catherine E. Radcliffe, Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool.

The Red Marked Testament.

WRITING from Glenmore, Prince's Park, Liverpool, Mrs. Menzies says:—"I remember how much you were interested in the Red Marked Testament. You will be pleased to hear that Mr. Frowde has been enabled to circulate more than one edition since it was issued six months ago. I have a number of exceedingly interesting testimonies of its having been already greatly used of God; and, in some cases, to the direct conversion of those to whom it had been given.

"Perhaps the most cheering feature is that, in a number of cases, the recipients of the Red Marked Testament were those who had a fair knowledge of their Bibles, but never definitely had their attention drawn to the special verses which point out the security of one who believes in Jesus until they studied these red marks. You know so well how many Christians are met with, who undoubtedly are believers, but lack full assurance; as they never seem to have been enabled to put their foot down upon the more definite Gospel verses, and hence so often they are unable to put before inquirers the simple milk of the Word, and speak with confidence and assurance."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE half-yearly meetings of the National Council, held on Friday at Exeter Hall, were attended by upwards of a hundred gentlemen representing the interests of the Y.M.C.A. in all parts of the country. The review of work presented gave evidence of a wide range of activity. The Council, beyond maintaining its ordinary effort, has made a forward move among the large towns of Lancashire, which has already yielded most satisfactory results; and it is intended, as part of a twentieth century programme, to develop in turn other districts where the organization is not strong. Important work has been done by the Council's officers in India and Burmah in behalf of European and native young men.

It also appeared that in the course of the year twenty-eight new branches have been started, while the work has been discontinued at half this number of centres. The "auxiliary" list has been augmented by over fifty societies. The world's total of associations has increased during the twelve months from 6,698 to 7,226. Sir George Williams was re-elected president and treasurer of the Council; and Mr. W. H. Seagram and Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton were reappointed chairman and treasurer respectively of the foreign department.

In connection with the British and Colonial Federation of Y.M.C.A.'s. the Council, at the conclusion of the business session, wished "God-speed" to Mr. W. M. Oatts, recently of Glasgow, who, accompanied by Mrs. Oatts, is starting on a special mission of succour and sympathy to the Associations in the Australian and other Colonies.

Sir George Williams spoke of the prominent part Mr. Oatts had for many years taken in work among the young men of Glasgow, where his labours had been singularly successful; and now the Lord was preparing him for broader service in the regions beyond. Mr. W. H. Seagram added a few kind and encouraging words, remarking that many would follow Mr. and Mrs. Oatts in all their journeyings. Lord Kinnaird spoke of the value of occasional visits to workers abroad, who derived inspiration and encouragement thereby. Mr. and Mrs. Oatts feelingly acknowledged the congratulations and hearty good-wishes of the Council, and expressed their deep sense of gratitude for the opportunity afforded of aiding the Y.M.C.A. centres abroad.

The annual report of the Shoreditch Association gives a brief review of the work which is characterized by spiritual vigour. Many efforts have been put forth to reach young men, and, as a result of evangelistic work, many young men are now living bright Christian lives, many of them being active workers in the Y.M.C.A., and members of various churches. Bible classes, missionary and prayer meetings, &c., have had a good effect, and several members have entered the ministry.

Union Tabernacle.—The work at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, is crippled by the want of a hall for work among the young and mothers' meetings. In order to erect a suitable building the sum of £500 is required. The district is a poverty-stricken one, and it is thought that those who are interested in the maintenance of Gospel work of a sound character among the poor will aid in the matter. Rev. D. M. Cameron sends cheering news as to the progress of the work. His address is Lochiel, 79, Union Road, Clapham, S.W.

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The fourth series of The Prize Reciter, edited by Joseph Malins, makes a volume that cannot but prove of great service to Band of Hope and other workers among the young. The pages embody a wealth of poetical and prose selections on topics of common interest and touching practical life. (2s. A. W. Hall.)

Great Thoughts latest volume is the thirty-first. It is a storehouse of gatherings from a wide field of literature, selected and served up in handy fashion for the use of busy teachers, preachers, and lecturers. There are thoughts on things intellectual and moral, human and Divine, and very readable interviews with men of influence in various departments of life and work. (4s. 6d. A. W. Hall.)

The ninth annual volume of Miss Mason's magazine, Rest and Reaping (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), is, as we have come to anticipate, a varied and instructive book. The contributions are of a helpful character throughout, notable for freshness of treatment as well as deep spirituality. There are, as usual, some thoughtful articles on prophecy, as well as some useful descriptions of home and foreign missionary work. The get-up of the book leaves nothing to be desired.

The yearly volume of the Christian Pictorial makes, as usual, a handsome gift-book. The more familiar features of the publication are well maintained, while a number of new developments contribute conspicuously to the general good effect. The illustrations include portraits of some well-known figures in social and religious life, while the antiquarian and historical interest is sustained by a number of breezily-written sketches of famous places and of old English worthies. (4s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard.)

The Young Standard Bearer, in volume form (1s. 6d.), contains a goodly assortment of temperance and other wholesome readings for the children. Friendly Leaves (2s.), edited by Christabel Coleridge, is the organ of the Girls' Friendly Society; it is varied in contents, and illustrated. Mothers in Council, edited by Charlotte M. Yonge, has reached its ninth volume (3s.). Parental responsibility is enforced in various ways, and much practical instruction on training the young is conveyed in the form of essays and shorter studies. As the organ of the Mothers' Union (Church of England), this serial exercises a powerful influence for good. (Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

CHRISTMAS NUMBERS.

Chatterbox Christmas-box will delight the young folk. (1s. nett. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) The "yarns" are as bright as the pictures.

The Christmas Number of Cassell's Magazine (1s.) is accompanied by a fine photogravure of Arthur C. Cooke's painting, "The Fortune-Teller." The general contents make entertaining reading, and there are four full-page plates in photogravure.

The special issue of the Sunday Magazine is A Brave Poor Thing, by L. T. Meade, with a young woman, a typewriter, for its heroine; and that of Good Words is The Magic Word, by Constance Smith, a story of life in rougher aspects. (6d. each. Isbister & Co.)

The Christmas number of The Temple Magazine opens with a fully-illustrated article, from the pen of Sir Wyke Bayliss, on "What was Christ like?" As a study of artistic representations of the Man Christ Jesus, the paper will be read by many with more than curious interest. Stephen Stapleton sketches the story of the Baptist Missionary Society. (6d. Horace Marshall & Son.)

The Christmas Number of The Graphic is printed throughout in colours. It contains stories by well-known writers, illustrated by Solomon J. Solomon, A.R.A., Frank Brangwyn, J. Walter West, C. Napier Hemy, A.R.A., and Seymour Lucas, R.A. There are, in addition, humorous pages, and two coloured plates—"A Flood," by the late Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A., and "The Loss of the Birkenhead," by Lance Calkin.

Three attractive Christmas numbers have been issued from Home Words Office: Lighter than Air (6d.)—containing an exciting balloon story, by Captain Maynard, and other items of interest—is the special number of the Fireside; the Day of Days issue is The Bells of St. Clement's (1d.), by Edward Garrett; and that associated with the favourite Home Words is The Lass that Loved a Sailor (1d.). These are good reading for a family circle.

Tom Graham, V.C., a tale of the Afghan War, by William Johnston, outlines a noble fellow, who served in a great campaign, twenty years ago, under General Roberts. How he became lieutenant and received the Victoria Cross, is shown in the very readable pages. (3s. 6d. Nelsons.)

Debrett's Waistcoat Pocket Diary for 1900 is a remarkably compact little book, printed on thin paper and bound in red leather. (Dean & Son.)

The War: God's Warning to the Nation, is the title of a stirring sermon by Rev. F. S. Webster, rector of All Souls', Langham Place, W. (Marshall Bros.)

Noble Deeds is a volume of stories of peril and heroism, edited by Charles D. Michael. (1s. 6d. Partridge). Some really good narratives of bravery, from newspapers and magazines, are here presented in a permanent form, in company with other selections in prose and poetry.

An amusing book for the little folks is Master Charlie: Painter, Poet, Novelist and Teacher, with numerous examples of his work, collected by C. S. Harrison and S. H. Hamer. (1s. 6d. Cassell.) A large part of the book is printed in colours, and the work includes "Leaves from Master Charlie's Sketch-book."

Bagster's "Gem Oratorios" have met a need long felt. In size they are indeed gem editions; in printing and general features they are also deserving of high commendation. Already three great works are available in this handy pocket form—Handel's Messiah, Mendelssohn's Elijah, and Haydn's Creation. (6d. upwards. Bagster & Sons.)

Natural history is made singularly attractive, and botany a delight, in Linda Gardiner's Sylvia in Flowerland (3s. 6d. Seeley & Co.) In the course of a series of vivacious talks, written for young people, flowers and insects, with their more familiar neighbours, are made to tell their own story of life and habit. The book is a work of art within and without, handsomely illustrated, and dedicated to Sir John Lubbock.

A volume of meditations, by Dr. J. R. Miller, is an annual treat. This year, Strength and Beauty (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) is the golden thread which runs through twenty-five chapters that are full of stimulus and suggestion. In the words of the author, the volume aims, "not at making life easy for its readers, but rather at making them brave and strong to do their best." Tastefully bound, the book is admirably suited for presentation purposes.

Rev. A. Herbert Gray, minister of Grosvenor Square Presbyterian Church, Manchester, feels, as we have consistently contended for many years that the inculcation of Protestant principles is more important than the criticism of Roman Catholic teaching and practices. Accordingly, he has been lecturing on the fundamental principles of the evangelical faith, and he issues these lectures in a handy volume—Aspects of Protestantism. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This is a book for the people, and we trust it will have many readers.

Those who are on the look-out for a book of adventure, will find pages as lively as they are readable in in M. Douglas's In Lionland: The Story of Livingstone and Stanley. The delights and risks of exploration in Central Africa, the land of the lion and his untamed companions, and where crocodiles and hippopotami roam at large, are described in vivid style. And how often will our lads not read the pages which tell, with abundant illustrations, of meeting cannibals, and encountering cataracts? (2s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.)

Lovers of books, and such as have a literary taste, will find pleasure in Joseph Shaylor's new compilation, Saunterings in Bookland, with Gleanings by the Way. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) Here are ten essays, or excerpts of that character, from De Britaine, De Quincey, Hazlitt, Lamb, Le Gallienne, and others. They relate to literature and study, success in literature and the life of books, along with other questions of fact or fancy. The volume is a gem in its way, and Meissonier's beautiful picture, entitled "The Reader," is reproduced as a frontispiece in heliogravure.

A volume of gatherings from a wide and fruitful field is Gems from the Fathers; or choice thoughts gathered from their numerous works, and arranged in alphabetical order, by Rev. Edwin Davies, D.D. (5s. nett. Bagster & Sons.) The early Christian writers left much that was of no permanent value; at the same time their works yield "dust of gold." So Dr. Davies felt; and as a result he gives us this beautiful collection of gems. The book is one to take up at leisure; it will also serve reference purposes for preachers and teachers who would sort an old sentiment in with modern teaching. The arrangement has the precision of a dictionary, and the printing and binding are in harmony with the precious contents.

An excellent little book, Tenses and Senses of Sin and Sinlessness, by Pastor A. M. A. Graham, may be obtained from the author, 11, Great Wellington Street, Glasgow. (1s. 8d. post free.) It is a warning against the errors of "Perfectionism," and is commended by Dr. J. Elder Cumming in these words: "May many a reader, pausing over these pages, be guarded by them from dangerous error, have his views of truth deepened and made clear, and have his soul quickened by the strong and profitable words which he will find here." The Gospel knows nothing of a perfected Adam. The Gospel, in its briefest form, is "Jesus and the Resurrection." We heartily commend these luminous lectures to all who need to know the way of God more perfectly.

We welcome a third English edition of The Life of Alexander Duff, D.D., LL.D., by George Smith, C.I.E., LL.D. The work has, in the words of the preface, been too long out of print. Twenty years have passed since two English, one Canadian, and three American editions were published in rapid succession. A new generation of readers at the opening of a new century may reasonably demand this very instructive book; and we trust that many will read it, and be stimulated to new endeavours by the old principles and experiences. By a careful abridgment, Dr. Smith has compacted the two volumes into one, and also brought the story down to date. Student volunteers are now entering the field, in response to the prayers of Duff and other pioneers. Such young men and women will find this book of great service in preparing for work on the field. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Mr. John Jackson, of the Mission to Lepers, has given us a remarkable piece of biography in Mary Reed, missionary to the lepers. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) The pathetic facts have been outlined in our columns; here we have the sad story in ampler detail. And is the book depressing? Decidedly not. It reads us a lesson in dutiful resignation, noble devotion, and complete confidence in our heavenly Father, who maketh all things work together for good to those who love Him. There is a striking portrait, also other illustrations. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who met the sadly-afflicted missionary at her post in India, writes an introduction. The record is calculated to stimulate others to complete consecration; and, at the same time, to call forth compassion for the thousands of lepers in India and other Eastern lands—who, though outcast from society, are not outside the "every creature" multitude to whom the Word of salvation has been sent by the Saviour of the world.

Whether writing on missions or miracles, Dr. A. T. Pierson commands attention, for God has given him a message for his age on apologetics as well as aggressive evangelization. During recent years Dr. Pierson has twice given us volumes combining the message compounded so as to impress the mind and stimulate the heart. Now he has issued The Miracles of Missions: Third Series, which is as readable and instructive as its predecessors. Here we have thirteen sketches, republished from the Missionary Review of the World, and admirably illustrated. They relate to various continents and countries, not excluding the islands of the sea; and, that home mission work may not be forgotten, an article by the late Thomas Paul is included, descriptive of Mr. George Holland's work in Whitechapel. The title-page defines the contents as "modern marvels in the history of missionary enterprise," and the stories outlined easily come within the scope of the description. (Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 4s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

Dean Farrar's new work, Texts Explained: or Helps to Understand the New Testament (6s. Longmans & Co.), exhibits qualities which the authorship warrants us to anticipate. Words and clauses, points and incidents in the successive chapters of the books of the New Testament, are made the subject of terse and perspicuous remark and exposition. The pages testify to thought and versatility; and some hundreds of passages are treated. The limitations of view and peculiarities of doctrine, which are associated with Dean Farrar's name, find expression here and there, and, on points of criticism and interpretation, bold positions are assumed. Occasionally the Protestant principles of the expositor are admirably expressed, as when, on Eph. iii. 11, he says:—"Here, as elsewhere throughout the New Testament, 'priests' (i.e., hiereis, 'sacrificial priests') are never so much as mentioned—except in so far as (in two passages only) all Christians alike are, metaphorically, 'priests' to offer up spriritual sacrifices (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9; Rev. i. 6, xx. 6)—among the holders of Christian offices. The New Testament knows no 'priest' in that sense except Christ (Heb. iii. 1, iv. 14, 15), in whom all who are in Christ are 'a royal priesthood.' Otherwise, the word is only used of Jewish (Heb. vii. 21) and of heathen priests (Acts xiv. 13). It is a simple, indisputable, and decisive fact that, whereas officers in the Christian Church are called Apostles, Evangelists, Prophets, Teachers, Presbyters, Ministers, Pastors, they are never so much as once called 'Priests.'"

William Montgomery has written a vigorous tract, entitled The Foundation of Christ's Religion. (1d. A. H. Stockwell & Co.)

Two excellent wall-sheets are "The Fireside" Almanack (1d.), printed in colours, and illustrative of Psa. xxiii.; and "Home Words" Almanack (1d.), illustrative of the Apostles' Creed ("Home Words" Office).

John Ploughman's Almanack for 1900 is as full of wit and wisdom as its predecessors in the years gone by. Spurgeon's Illustrated Almanack is a handy booklet, with a Scripture text for every day. (1d. each. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Notes & Comments

AT this time of the year, when the appeals of religious societies are especially numerous, it is impossible for us to represent each at length, or as fully as we could wish. We hope, therefore, our kind readers will interest themselves in the advertisement pages which describe these many useful agencies, and respond liberally to the pleas therein set forth; and if they appear to be more numerous than usual, it is only because of the exceptional stress incident upon the weeks preceding Christmas.

We hear on all sides, from various mission agencies with which our readers are familiar, of deficits and depleted exchequers. The impression is pretty universal that the special war funds for the refugees and bereaved English homes and children are responsible for this. The latter objects are so worthy that we must not seem to depreciate them. We may, however, point out that this appeal is to the wider sympathies of the public at large, and would remind our readers that our pages report mission work in which a much smaller section of the public is interested. We trust, therefore, that our friends will loyally stand by the societies which all the year round are giving of their best of time and strength as almoners of the Lord's stewards.

The message of the Princess of Wales to the wives and families of our soldiers in South Africa will touch many hearts by its pathos and simplicity:

> My heart bleeds for the poor widows and fatherless, whose loved ones have met a glorious death fighting for their Queen and country. May God help and comfort them in their saddened Christmas, and give them that peace which passeth understanding.
> "Peace, perfect peace: with loved ones far away,
> In Jesus' keeping we are safe and they."
> Alexandra, Princess of Wales.

The esteem in which her Royal Highness has ever been held by the people of these islands will be increased by her timely and gracious words of comfort.

Complaints are growing louder and louder at the slow manner in which the funds collected for the families left behind by the Reserve soldiers are reaching the women and children for whom they were collected. There seems to be an evil genius of red-tape at work in all Government circles, so that prompt action is impossible. Meanwhile, the proper beneficiaries are suffering daily privation.

Preaching recently at Leeds in connection with the festival of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Bishop of Lincoln spoke impressively in regard to our national responsibilities with respect to the coloured races. He urged that "neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision," translated into the language of our time, would mean no difference between the white and the coloured, and went on to say:—

> The white man should not desire to blot out the coloured races of the world, but to raise them to be fellow-workers with God . . . The littleness of England and the greatness of the Empire seemed to admit of but one explanation. It was the Divine goodness and power. The figures of missionary statistics seemed to remain very stationary, if allowance was made for the increase in the population of the world. Only about one-third of the world was yet Christian even in name. Was our world-wide Empire fulfilling its destiny in the evangelization of the world? This was the question of questions for all members of the Empire.

We are glad to find that the report circulated last week concerning the health of Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, was incorrect. The announcement was made in one of the meetings in London, with a request for prayer. The following has been received from Barnstaple:—"Mr. Chapman has had no illness, and is quite well. He is singularly free from the infirmities of old age. This evening he will conduct his usual weekly Bible reading."

There has been an interesting and suggestive correspondence in The Guardian as to the best way of "winning over Dissenters." It marks a great advance on the Elizabethan and Laudian plans of suppression, imprisonment, and Star Chamber. Briefly, most of the correspondents plead for the bribe instead of the whip. Dissenters are to be admitted, without distinction, to coal, clothing, and other clubs, and to the privileges of hospital letters, and all the Church charities. A country parson boasts that this plan, pursued by him for twenty-five years in his own parish, has closed four chapels and greatly weakened four others. Another enthusiast for the extinction of Dissent gives this as a useful motto: "Win by love; you will never win by fighting. Outpray them, out-preach them, out-manœuvre them."

The attitude that lies behind such a policy is based on an assumption which accounts for much of the alienation between Anglicanism and the Free Churches, and affects both sides. This is, that it is the duty of the Church of England to stamp out Dissent. So long as this is felt and acted upon, it is useless to expect the relations between the two sides to improve, even though the way of combating Dissent be altered from foul means to fair. It is not by drawing away adherents from the one side that the other side should seek to improve its position, but by making converts from the world, the flesh, and the devil. Proselytism is the work of fanatics, not of Christians. Believers in Christ should be at one in rejoicing at each other's success when, and only when, that success is at the expense of evil and sin. Transference from one church to another does not extend the kingdom of God, but simply redistributes its members. It would be well for many preachers to remember this.

Without raising the question as to how far bazaars and sales of work are legitimate means of raising funds for religious purposes, it is at least incontestable that they should be dissociated altogether from every doubtful practice. On the whole, there has been very distinct advance in this matter of late years. Raffling is dying hard, but it is going, and various forms of doubtful amusement are growing unpopular. These evils, however, are still practised, as is clear from the fact that recently, at a bazaar connected with a place of worship, bottles of spirits were raffled for, and "drinks were sold by young ladies who," we are told, "appeared to enjoy playing at being barmaids." Such disgraceful scenes do untold mischief to religion, and demoralize everyone concerned in them. To hold a truce with the drink traffic in the name of the Church is an insult to the cause of religion.

What would Christian and philanthropic work be without the influence of self-denying and pious women? How many Christian efforts would languish if it were not for their untiring and trustful labours! Yet the board of management of the Royal Hospital for Incurables has again not only rejected Miss Hill's motion, that women should be added to the board, but has gone out of its way to issue circulars to the 11,000 subscribers calling upon them to oppose Miss Hill. We can only trust that, before another annual meeting, those who support the institution will fully consider the question in the light of the valuable services which noble-hearted women are rendering all around us, as in that case there can be only one result.

Much good is likely to result from the action of the Committee of the Protestant Reformation Society in arranging for the delivery of Protestant lectures at the English University centres. No man more qualified to treat the subject in a scholarly and unprejudiced manner could have been chosen than Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D. An opportunity will thus be given at Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham for both graduates and undergraduates to hear what can still be said, in spite of the sacerdotal trend in the Establishment, upon the great sacred truths of Protestantism. Definite teaching in favour of Reformation principles is what all classes of the community need.

There is one significant feature in the conduct of such Ritualists as are surrendering the practice of "censing" and carrying lights during the Communion Service. Almost all of them profess that they are yielding under pressure, "for the present." What are they waiting for? There does not seem to be any higher court that any of them are willing to appeal to. Are they waiting till they have undermined the authority of the archbishops by a campaign of insult against their authority? Or for a turn in the tide of public opinion? Or for the fickle public to grow tired of its alarm at their gradual approximation to Romanist ways? In any case, this is a matter to be watched. For the present, the Ritualist camp is full of alarms; but when that mood passes away, we may be sure there will be a recrudescence of illegal practices, unless a close scrutiny is kept on their doings and methods. The evil is scotched, but as yet it is far from killed.

In a former note we called attention to the alarming number of cases of legalized vivisection, and to a proposal to develop the means of conducting experiments upon living animals at the various London hospitals. Our notice has been directed to a recent remarkable address from Sir J. Burdon Sanderson at the Middlesex Hospital, in which reference is made to "the value of the hospital patient as a subject for scientific research." Sir Burdon seems to reduce materially the already too narrow distance between the laboratory table, with its writhing animal, and the hospital bed, with its suffering patient. He is reported to have said:

I cannot conceal from myself that there are many persons, whose opinions are worthy of respect, to whose minds disease presents itself under one aspect only, namely, as a thing to be cured or prevented, and to whom any method of investigation which, disregarding for the moment the benefit of the sufferer, professes to have as its aim the discovery of the causal relations between certain morbid changes, and the conditions which give rise to them, would seem unprofitable and even unjustifiable. Yet investigation of this kind is precisely what is meant by the scientific study of disease.

This is plain speaking, and we commend to our readers the thoughtful consideration of the probabilities to which it points. The tortured animal is technically spoken of as being 'under control.' The poor hospital patient is not supposed to be; but if "the benefit of the sufferer" is to be disregarded for the sake of the mere scientific study of disease, there is much room for more than doubt as to strict recognition of the boundary line. In one modern case, an animal which had been operated upon was allowed to linger for fourteen months, doubtless most of the time in agony, the excuse being that "scientific research," which Sir J. Burdon Sanderson has now openly advocated, should be extended to the helpless, non-paying hospital patient. The Middlesex Hospital appeals to the public for voluntary subscriptions and donations, and is in urgent need of such; but it will be surprising if there is not a falling off in the revenue in consequence of the outspoken utterances to which we have referred.

Amid much that is depressing in our relatinos with France recently, the news is very welcome that the representatives of the French Government in Madagascar have largely restored the schools and colleges taken from the L.M.S. and given to the Jesuits some time ago. Perfect religious toleration has been announced. The causes of this change of policy are not quite clear; but it is evident that the Jesuits have lost cast with the Government, who have become convinced that the L.M.S. missionaries are not the disloyal Gallophobes they were represented to be at the time of the French conquest. The restoration of the work into the hands of the Society is likely, however for the time, to cause some financial embarrassment. In consequence of French rule, and of the new customs duties, the cost of living in Madagascar is much higher than before. This increases the direct expenditure on the working of the mission centres, and makes it impossible for the native Christians to contribute towards the work as they did once. The L.M.S. proposes to take back the work by degrees, as the door opens.

A minister from Australia recently made the remark that it would gladden the hearts of the friends of missionary work, and shew them how wide-reaching are its results, if they could see the number of missionaries' children now occupying important positions in the southern hemisphere, and wielding a vast influence for good. This is as it ought to be, and as we should expect it to be; nevertheless we are thankful for the testimony. The new generation, where they are not literally following in the steps of their parents, are forming the life and shaping the destinies of new kingdoms; and they will all be wanted, and more. They will be no small support to those spiritual ideals by which alone communities can be attracted from base and perishing things, and shaped into cities of God.

Resurrection and the Aaronic Priesthood.—II.

By MR. HENRY VARLEY.

It is impossible to exaggerate the spiritual wrong of those priests and systems whose sacrifices and teachings deny that, by one offering of Himself, the Lord Jesus has not only "put away sin," but "perfected for ever them that are sanctified." These men act as though Christ had not died and risen again, and as though the Epistle to the Hebrews had never been written for the instruction of Israel, and for the guidance of the Church of God. We need to hold fast

THE VITAL CONTRAST.

"For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was written since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore." Let it never be forgotten! The Lord Jesus had no part in connection with any priestly office, so far as the Aaronic institution was concerned. Nevertheless, He is not only a priest, but the "Great High Priest over the House of God." Neither Levi, Aaron, nor his sons have or could have place or position as priests after Christ's death and resurrection. It is worthy of note that the Old Testament knows no higher title than the "High Priest." It remained for the Holy Ghost to reveal to us, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, the illustrious and majestic title, "The Great High Priest." Here the abiding Melchisedec is clearly seen, and priestly position and office is for ever in the hands of one exalted Lord, who has passed into heaven itself. Peers He has none, could have none, either in heaven or on earth. His supreme ability to save all that come unto God by Him excludes all priestly function, office, or sacrifice at the hands of man.

It is profoundly interesting to observe that, when Melchisedec met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the Kings (Gen. xiv.), he brought forth bread and wine. We read, "And he blessed him and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth." Here, observe, there is entire absence of priestly function in any sacrificial sense; and we ask, why? Because the true Melchisedec was not manifested. The fulness of time had not come. He, of whom Melchisedec was the type, had not yet appeared. Melchisedec in that submission to the Divine will which is so needed by Romanists and Ritualists of these days showed no disposition to trespass upon priestly functions, which alone pertained to Christ Jesus. There is no allusion either to priestly garments, altar, or sacrifice; ritual, also, is absent. Bread and wine, participation and blessing, in the name of the Most High, give the total of this ministry and meeting with Abram. Who can fail to see the intimate and striking connection with this scene, which was repeated by in the guest-chamber where our Lord sits, surrounded by his disciples?

With reverent tread and silent adoration let us enter. Mark well his action and observe his words. "And Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them, and said, 'Take, eat; this is my body.' And He took the cup and gave thanks, and gave to them, saying, Drink ye all of it, for this is my blood of the new covenant which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Luke xxii. 19, 20). Is this a striking coincidence only? Nay, verily! Here it is where, in the fulness of time, Christ Jesus, the true Melchisedec, is seen in his High Priestly appointment.

It was that night which marked his agony and sweat of blood in the garden, and preceded his cross and passion, that shows the Great High Priest engaged in the very acts which marked his illustrious prototype. Here our King of righteousness and peace meets the friends of the Most High God. He also brings forth bread and wine. He also blesses them. And now the Great High Priest is betrayed. The Shepherd is smitten, and the atoning Substitute and Surety dies. Jehovah's Fellow, the brightness of the Father's glory, lays down his life. He was wounded for our transgressions, who, his own self, "bare our sins in his own body on the tree," and He who knew no sin "was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

To give prominence, therefore, to a human priestly system is to bring to the front that which we have seen to be for ever exhausted. The Melchisedec priesthood knows neither elaborate ritual ceremonies, vestments, nor repeated sacrifice. It is in imitation of the Aaronic institution that priests recognised, and ceremonial vestments and dresses worn. The repetition of sacrifice is likewise taught, and sacramental efficacy is declared to be in the hands of those who are falsely spoken of as priests in the asserted "order and line of Apostolical succession." All these assumptions and professions are contrary to the principles and genius of the Melchisedec priesthood, which centres in Christ alone.

Let it be firmly maintained and intelligently taught that this prolonged effort to revive in England a human priesthood represents the attempt to enswathe with costly robes, and exhibit on fanciful altars an institution with which our Lord was never identified, and which has long since passed away. However successful this activity, it can but yield the exhuming of that which lies in the sepulchre, a relic and shadow of the past. The Aaronic priesthood never possessed ability to justify or save one human soul. "Their sacrifices," God Himself declares, "could never take away sin." The fact is that nothing can be added to Christ's completed work.

An elaborate ritual, such as is common in the Roman Catholic and High Church services, finds neither countenance nor example in the Melchisedec priesthood. To attempt to reconstruct by ritual and garland with flowers a fanciful altar, to array men as priests in vestments of gorgeous colours after the pattern of Babylon or Aaron, betrays either ignorance or temerity of action which can only be described as presumptuous disobedience. How entirely removed from the mind of Christ the professed "visible church," represented by the Roman Catholic and High Church system is, we here see to be clearly proved.

It is, indeed, high time that there should be a very distinct and outspoken return to Christ, who is the Head of the Church, as distinguished from these corrupt and carnal institutions. These systems have dared to usurp the authority of Christ, and practically removed God's exalted centre. Christ Jesus the Lord is the Head of all authority and power to his Church; He is the one centre of rallying to the Church which is his body. The professed Church is not that centre. Christ is, and always has been. "One is your Master and Lord, and all ye are brethren." Here and now, the modern phrase, "Back to the Christ," has indeed intelligent and significant meaning.

Work among the Pariahs.—Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, Methodist Episcopal Missionary, Kodambakam, Madras, writes to us:—"My work among the much oppressed and depressed classes of Pariahs is being blessed by God abundantly. Our community now numbers nearly forty, and our school children nearly a hundred. To the latter I usually gave a treat during Christmas time and some clothes. Many of our children do not enjoy a full meal once a month. Toys, Bible texts, and tracts will be thankfully received."

Protestant Alliance.—Under the auspices of this organization, meetings have been recently held in Northampton, where a four-days' mission was conducted by Mr. D. S. Hyslop, with good results. Also, largely attended meetings have been held at Brentford, the lecturer being Mr. Job Williams; at Beaumont Hall, Mile End Road, where Rev. M. E. Farwell spoke on "Reasons why we should not join the Church of Rome;" and at Devizes, where Rev. A. A. Isaacs delivered a lecture in the Town Hall, entitled "Protestantism and Romanism Compared and Contrasted." The Alliance has a large number of meetings arranged for the winter months in all parts of the country.

The Lord's Prayer.*

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

VI.—Forgive us Our Debts.

HERE we come to the first sad note in this prayer. The first three petitions angels and saints in heaven could offer. The fourth could have been used in Eden, for in innocency our first parents received their daily bread from God. But the fifth is only for sinners of our fallen race. It is a cry out of the depths—a cry, however, which every mortal needs to make.

"Father, forgive us our debts." Our sins are debts. A debt is something we owe to another. To whom do we owe these debts? To ourselves? No doubt every sin we commit is a wrong done to ourselves. Can we say that our life is our own, and that we may do with it as we will? Our life is not our own. It belongs to God, and is ours only to use, to keep unspotted and uninjured, and to present at last to Him who gave it to us. Sins against ourselves are debts to God.

We owe debts to others. There are obligations of love to them which we have not fulfilled. We continually pass by human needs which we do not supply. One of the bitterest ingredients in the cup of sorrow ofttimes is the recollection of

DUTIES OF LOVE UNFULFILLED.

In the case of refined, cultivated people, the greater part of their sinning against others is not in injustices, cruelties, and wrongs committed, but in the neglecting of duties which ought to have been performed. How often we fail in kindness, in thoughtfulness, in giving encouragement and help to others! Paul said he was a debtor to every man: he meant that he owed to every man love and all love's service. So do we. What hopeless debtors we are!

But is it only to our fellow men that we owe these debts? Would their forgiveness of us set us free from the obligation? No: all our sins against others are sins against God. Even a cruelty to a bird, or to an animal, is a sin against God. It is with God we have to do in every thought and act. We may do wrong to others; we can sin only against God, and our sin. David had wrecked a home, caused the death of a faithful soldier, and brought dishonour upon a nation; but he said truly, "Against Thee—Thee only—have I sinned." Jesus made it plain that our unpaid debts of love to men are debts to God. In the judgment, those who have neglected to feed the hungry, give drink to the thirsty, and care for the sick, are said to have failed in these duties to the Judge himself. He who sins against another sins against God.

Every sin we commit, therefore, leaves a debt to God charged against us. This is true, not only of positive violations of law, but also of every failure to measure up to the full requirements of the Divine law. Suppose we had lived without actual sin all to-day, have we loved God with all our heart, soul, strength, and mind? and have we loved our neighbour as ourself? All that we ought to have done, and yet have left undone, is a debt to God.

Then all these debts are charged against us. The Bible speaks of the books which shall be opened. There everything is registered, and the record is indelible. We may forget the debt, but forgetting it does not pay it.

The word "our" is suggestive. Our sins are our own. Each one lives his own life apart. In the 51st Psalm David speaks continually of "my sin," "my transgression," "my iniquity." He could blame his sins on no other. He could transfer his guilt to none else. "Nothing," said Augustine, "is so much our own as our sins." The most loving friend could not take our sin and free us from it. David would have died for Absalom, but it was a vain wish. Every one must give account of himself unto God.

What shall we do? Here is the only answer: "Father, forgive us our debts." Can sin be forgiven? We are told that nature knows no forgiveness. You cannot get back the health lost in sinful indulgence. You cannot recall the bitter word which flew yesterday from your lips into a loving heart. You cannot undo the evil which caused an innocent person to fall. Yet from the beginning of the Bible to its close we are assured that God is a God of mercy, and that, however great our sins against Him, He will forgive us.

What is God's forgiveness? Is it simply the remission of the penalty? Does God merely save us from punishment and nothing more?

WOULD THAT SATISFY US

and give us peace? It is not the dread of the consequences of sin that is its most fearful element. It is the burden upon the soul, the sense of guilt, the anguish of remorse—this is what makes sin so terrible. Would the lifting away of the penalty, while all the bitterness of sin itself stays in the heart, be a forgiveness that would bring joy? Would heaven make us happy with all this woe within?

The forgiveness that will bring blessing must not only remit the penalty, but must also include the taking away of the sin itself, the undoing of the terrible ruin which sin has wrought in us, the creating anew of our life in the Divine image, and the making of us as though we had not sinned at all. Here it is that the work of Christ's redemption comes in. Salvation means more than the removal of guilt. The old legend says that a dove nestled on the cross when Jesus was dying. The suggestion was that the power of the Holy Spirit was necessary to in the life cleansed by the blood of Christ. The Lamb of God taketh away—not the penalty only of sin, but the sin itself.

There is another little word here which must not be overlooked: "Forgive us." Throughout all this prayer we have been taught not to speak to God for ourselves alone. We approach the gates of prayer, crying, not "My Father," but "Our Father." Selfishness must die as we fall on our knees. In asking for bread, we are taught to think of others' needs as well as our own. So here, when we cry for forgiveness, we must include others.

There is a sense in which we must bring our own sins alone to God. They are our own, and no one but ourself can get them forgiven. We must confess our own sins and repent of our own sins. No one can get forgiveness for us. The pharisee in the parable was free in confessing the publican's sins, but said not a word about his own.

THE PUBLICAN'S CONFESSION

was the true one. He troubled himself only with his own unworthiness. "God be merciful to me, the sinner." While there must be an individual confession of sin, we should include others in our pleading for forgiveness—"Forgive us." It is not enough to find heaven for ourselves. We must seek also the saving of all others.

There is yet another part of this petition which is very important. "Forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors." Here many people stumble in praying this prayer. They cannot truly make these closing words their own. This is the only petition in the Lord's Prayer which has a vow attached to it. We cannot ask God to forgive us without pledging ourselves to repeat his forgiveness to others who may have wronged us.

We do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.

The Divine forgiveness is regenerating; it changes the forgiven sinner into a child of God, and puts into him a heart full of love for God and for all men. Forgiven is forgiving. Jesus says plainly that if we will not forgive our brother his trespasses, God will not forgive us our trespasses. This is a startling word to come from Christ's lips. But we must not try to tone it down to meet the hardness of our own hearts. Certainly we are not ready to receive God's forgiveness until we have given up the resentment and unforgivingness in ourselves. These unloving feelings block the door against the entering in of the love and mercy of God. In an old picture, a child drops a toy out of its hand that it may take a beautiful dove that is flying toward it. We must let go our grudges, our malice, our bitterness, all our resentment, if we would receive God's wonderful forgiveness.

One of our Lord's lessons shows us how unreasonable it is to refuse to forgive our brother. Our debts to God are represented by ten thousand talents, a vast sum; while, at the worst, our neighbour's debt to us is only a few pence. God forgives freely. Shall we insist then on exacting the payment of the trifling sum for which our neighbour is indebted to us?

We are helped in the learning of this hard lesson when we remember that it is not our place nor our duty to judge others. Judgment belongs only unto God. It is our duty to bear patiently even the greatest wrongs, committing to God the whole matter of justice and right. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him."

We should not pass over the teaching of this petition lightly, nor be too lenient in excusing ourselves for our unforgivingness. Rather, we should let the lesson work in us deeply and thoroughly, until the last trace of bitterness has been cast out. Luther warns us against using this prayer, if in our heart we do not forgive those who have wronged us: "When thou sayest, 'I will not forgive,' and standest before God with and mumblest with thy mouth, 'Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors,' what is that but saying, 'I do not forgive him, and so do not Thou forgive me! Thou hast told me to forgive, and rather than obey I will renounce Thee, and thy heaven, and all, and be the devil's for evermore'!"

We cannot use the first part of the petition and leave off the second. We cannot ask God to forgive us and not say also, "as we also have forgiven our debtors." This is the only gate to the altar of mercy. We shut the gate on ourselves when we refuse to forgive.

We need never be afraid to go as far as God goes in forgiving. We pray continually to be made like Christ. Christlikeness is no mere beautiful sentiment. We know how Christ loved unto the uttermost, how forbearing He was, how abundant in forgiving. Even on the cross the very drops which the cruel nails pressed from his hands and feet became the blood of redemption. When we ask to be made Christlike, we ask to be made forgiving, that we may forgive others as we ask God to forgive us.

Preventive and Rescue Homes, Chelsea.—During the past year there have been some sad cases in the Homes, needing constant and watchful care. In 1890 the receipts of the year were £313. This year they are only £242, and funds are needed to place the work on a firm foundation. Copies of the report, to which the Dowager Lady Annaly writes an introduction, may be had from Miss Hugill, 93, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.

Educational Difficulty in Devonshire.—The Congregational church and managers of the British School at Witheridge have been greatly hampered in their efforts to secure the continuance of unsectarian public elementary education. For over fifty years the school has earned the "Excellent" merit grant, and received the praise of Her Majesty's inspectors. Last year, however, the premises were condemned by the architect of the Education Department; and, in view of this, Rev. H. J. E. Bishop, pastor and chairman, writes:—"A school board is not possible; we are, therefore, compelled either to build or allow our children to be swept into the National School, under teaching and influence contrary to our principles. Rather than this, we have decided to build, believing that in our struggle to uphold evangelical doctrines and principles, we shall secure the sympathy and help, not only of Free Churchmen, but of Evangelicals of the Episcopal Church as well." A site has been secured, and the building, which is to be erected at a cost of between £600 and £700, will also be used as a Sunday School—a convenience which has long been needed. Mr. Bishop's address is The Manse, Witheridge, N. Devon.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 17. Neh. vii.

HOW great a tribute it is to a man's character to be reckoned faithful—one who can be trusted, on whom responsibility can be imposed! There is a great difference between faith and faithfulness: in the first, we have confidence in God keeping his covenant with us; in the second, God has confidence in our keeping tryst with Him. In the one case, we reckon upon God; in the second, God reckons upon us. Can God trust you with work among young and old, with money, with pain and suffering, with sentry-duty, or the quiet, obscure work of the trench? Perhaps your isolation from active and useful service arises from your not being faithful in a very little. You cannot, therefore, be put into positions where great faithfulness is required. What an epitaph to be written by the Spirit of God on this man's tomb, "A faithful man, and one that feared God above many!"

How naïve and simple Nehemiah was in saying, "God put it into my heart to gather." Let us keep an open heart for God to put into it what He will. How many holy thoughts and impulses, what bright suggestions and wise arrangements, would result from a greater freedom of intercourse between God and us! And when some happy idea comes from above, betraying its heavenly origin by the light upon its face, give God the praise.

That paragraph about the deposition from the priesthood of certain who could not show their genealogy is very searching. Its lesson for us is, that we cannot act as the priests of God so long as we are not sure of our acceptance with Him, through adoption and grace; nor have we any right to eat of the holy things. But Jesus has the Urim and Thummim, the white stone on which the new name is engraven. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive and cleanse.

MONDAY, December 18. Neh. viii.

What hunger for the word of God! Probably the MSS. of the law had become very scarce, and many of the younger generation were unfamiliar with the contents. This public reading and interpretation led on to the institution of synagogues, which from this time were so important a part of the religious life of the Jews. The nearest parallel to this picture is yielded by the little groups that were accustomed to gather around the chained Bibles of our cathedrals, which godly men were wont to read and expound. The eagerness of the people, and the reverent greeting given to Ezra as he began his sacred duty, are very beautiful. Altogether, it must have been a most imposing spectacle. Ezra stood on the rostrum of wood, with the reverent band of elders on his right and left, whilst another little band took it in turns to explain whatever needed exposition.

First, there was deep conviction of sin. The sword of the Lord cut to the quick.

Second, there was a rebound of joy; as, indeed, was also befitting. In his strong vernacular, I have often heard Mr. Moody say, when the pail slops one way, it will another.

Thirdly, there was immediate obedience. Without delay, the people poured out to the Mount of Olives, and gathered boughs to be woven into booths.

What a beautiful idea is suggested by the R.V. marginal rendering of v. 10: "The joy of the Lord is your stronghold!" But be sure that you have the genuine joy of the Lord, which is the fruit of the Spirit for those who are justified by faith, and live within it as a sacred enclosure. The microbes of temptation will not be able to pass this barrier. Satan himself cannot capture the singing and rejoicing believer. "Let us sing a hymn, and shame the devil," said Luther. Holy song and praise will be sure preservatives also against despondency and despair, which so greatly predispose us towards evil.

TUESDAY, December 19. Neh ix.

This confession was made by the Levites on the part of the people. It contains three distinct notes.

First, it magnifies the great deeds of God on behalf of his people. His exalted majesty (5), his creative might (6), his choice of Abraham (7), his interposition on the part of his people in delivering them from Pharaoh (10), the marvels of the desert-pilgrimage (15), their settlement in Canaan (25), their repeated restoration under the hand of judges (27), his patient forbearance (31). It is a marvellous story; but not more wonderful than God's dealings with each of us. I am prepared to believe in any miracle of love towards men, as I reflect on what God has been to me.

Secondly, it tells the sad story of human sin. The hardened neck, the refusal to obey, the making of the calf, the disobedience which cast his law behind the back, and wrought great provocation; the cry in the time of distress, and the repetition of evil in the moments of respite; the withdrawal of the neck, and deafening of the ear; the turning to wicked works and ways, and the forfeiture of so much which was given them to possess and enjoy—alas, all these have their counterparts in us, to whom, therefore, belong shame and confusion of face.

Thirdly, God's manifold methods of recovery and restoration. Now mercy—a God ready to pardon, gracious, and slow to anger. Then a refusal to forsake his chosen people, in spite of every provocation to do so. "In thy manifold mercies Thou forsookest them not." Testimony and forbearance, grace and mercy, rigour and requital, they all pass in review, as though to show the Divine ingenuity which strives to rid us of sin and bring us into union with God.

WEDNESDAY, December 20. Neh. x.

It was well to enter into this covenant. Pledges like these are, on the whole, wise and salutary as representing our ideals, and that we desire to live up to the standard we profess. At the same time, what life is there that is not littered by broken vows and shattered resolutions! It is clear that we could never win God's favour by obedience. The good we would, we do not; the evil we would not, we do.

Tersteegen says truly: Place no confidence whatever in your own hearts, your courage, your strength, your light, your virtues, or your faithfulness, but be as little children who must perish without a mother's care. All that is our own is worthless, and everything else is free grace, for which we must every moment wait and receive. But we can never trust too much our gracious Redeemer. He is faithful, and will perform that in us and through us which neither we nor any other mortal would be able to accomplish.

These are a few simple rules with which we must comply if we are to remain true to our covenants. 1. Let us love, esteem, and use the Holy Scriptures, feeding on them for the daily strengthening of the inner life. 2. Let us constantly set before us the pure and holy word, and the self-denying life of Jesus Christ for our correction and imitation. 3. Let us never forget the doctrine of Jesus Christ, especially respecting the denial of the self-life, as the primary and most necessary characteristic of his true disciples. "The way is narrow, and the gate is strait." 4. Let us watch and pray, that our faithless hearts may not wander from God. Let us watch over our senses—our ears, eyes, mouth, and tongue. They are the port-holes into which a thousand temptations enter. 5. Let us also trust more absolutely in the indwelling and mighty power of the Holy Spirit.

THURSDAY, December 21. Neh. xi.

It was important that the metropolis should be occupied by a population sufficiently numerous, industrious, and wealthy, so as to form a centre of influence and strength. A tenth of the rural population was therefore chosen by lot to dwell there, and, in addition to these, many settled voluntarily. These were specially deserving of mention and public thanks (2).

There are interesting little bits of characterization. Mattaniah, who was the chief to begin the thanksgiving in prayer. Who among us will seek for that post in the New Jerusalem? It was good, too, that the singers should have a settled daily provision; those among us who provide the sacred song should have no anxiety about their maintenance, else their burdened spirits cannot mount on the wing. Then Pethahiah heard all causes in dispute between the king and the people, adjudicating between them the matters of tribute and public grievance. Each man had his post, and all remained in amity and concord.

Let us believe that God has a distinct reason in our life. To discover it, and to give ourselves to its fulfilment, is the secret of a blessed unity and tranquility of soul. The undertaking of some external employment is as needful for our well-being as it is well-pleasing to God.

We ought not, however, to enter upon our daily duties with undue ardour for the gains that may result, or burden ourselves too heavily, but do all that we do to the Lord (Col. iii. 23; Ephes. vi. 7). By the simple intention of doing all things, whether little or great, to the Lord, and from love to Him, even the smallest things became important and earth is turned to gold.

FRIDAY, December 22. Neh. xii.

There is a great deal of praise in this chapter. After the enumeration of Priests and Levites, some names in each list being evidently added after Nehemiah's day, we have the record of the Levite choristers who praised and gave thanks, "ward against ward," the worship being antiphonal. Then, again, the singers are gathered from all parts to the dedication of the wall. It seems that a double procession went around the newly-constructed wall, one company, headed by Ezra, going to the right; and the other, with Nehemiah in the rear, going to the left. The circuit of the city was thus made in different directions, until the two bands met on the opposite side of the city and marched in one great host to the temple.

Let us cultivate more constantly "a spirit of praise." When Madame Guyon was deprived of her liberty, she was perfectly happy, and sang:

A little bird I am,
Shut from the fields of air,
And in my cage I sit and sing
To Him who placed me there.
Well pleased a prisoner to be,
Because, my God, it pleaseth Thee.

Naught have I else to do;
I sing the whole day long;
And He, whom most I love to please,
Doth listen to my song.
He caught and bound my wandering wing,
But still He bends to hear me sing.

And when the walls of the New Jerusalem are complete, and the purposes of God are fulfilled, what bliss will it not be to encircle those walls in two great companies of them that give thanks! "The song of Moses and of the Lamb."

SATURDAY, December 23. Neh. xiii.

carries the weight of the universe—ah, how much is this! But what is it not to be loved, to be accepted in the Beloved, to dwell in his Presence as a dearly-loved child!

Nehemiah was very pronounced and decisive in his actions, casting forth Tobiah's household stuff, threatening the Tyrian fish-sellers with imprisonment if they persisted in coming with their wares on the Sabbath, and plucking out the hair of certain who married foreign women. He did not mince matters, and must have been possessed of uncommon force of character and will-power.

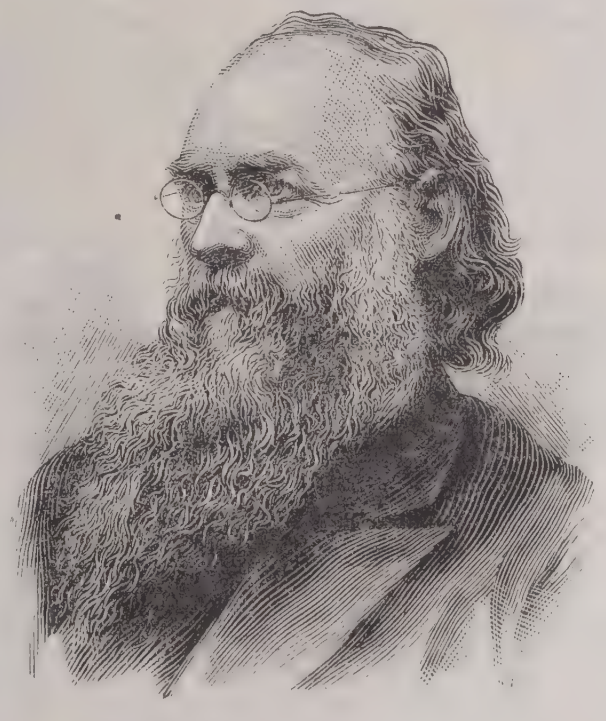
His efforts for the purity of the people, and specially for the tranquility of the rest-day, must have been of priceless worth. Nothing lays a people under heavier obligation than an effort to maintain the weekly day of rest; and, like Nehemiah, we should unite to defend it.

But it is specially necessary to keep the perpetual Sabbath of the heart, shutting gates and doors against all intruding worries and cares. This is only possible when Christ indwells, and keeps the heart full of his own peace. His indwelling is not a mere metaphor, not a bare moral relation, but the most blessed reality—a veritable union of life and love.

An Anti-Infidel Champion.

The Late Mr. H. L. HASTINGS.

WITH sincere sorrow we recently announced the departure of a bold witness for Christ from this scene of toil and turmoil. Known and loved in both old and new worlds, Horace L. Hastings was a diligent servant of Christ, and eternity alone will declare the results of his influence and labour among the men and women of the past generation.



Our friend was a descendant of Thomas Hastings, who left the Old World for the New in 1634, and whose family numbered men of great distinction in Church and State. On his mother's side the lamented evangelist and editor, whose career we purpose briefly to outline, had the blood of the Scottish Hamiltons and Knoxes, who also settled in New England in the seventeenth century. Hence the vigour of English Puritanism and the boldness of Caledonian Presbyterianism, in combination with noble traditions, religious and educational, found expression in the lives and characters of men and women of several generations. All these forces seemed to meet in the person and career of the one who has just entered into rest.

Mr. Hastings was born in 1831 at Blandford, Mass., and, from his youth up, was a voracious reader. His mind was early stored with history and poetry; his heart was set upon sublime themes and sober purposes; and there was a strong dash of humour, first in his conversation, later in his public speaking and writing. For four successive generations his immediate ancestors had been preachers, so it was not strange that before he was eighteen he "graduated" from farm and sawmill, and entered upon evangelistic work, using voice and pen and printing-press ever since.

A man of noble presence and genial personality, with a powerful yet sympathetic voice, he was capable of commanding the attention of large audiences, whether speaking indoors or out. He travelled hundreds of thousands of miles on both sides of the Atlantic, and spoke thousands of times in the chief cities of America and Great Britain, in highways and byways, theatres, steamships, tents, churches — wherever he could find people willing to listen to the words of truth. Avoiding disputes about dead issues, adopting as his motto, "No creed but the Bible, no master but Christ, no name but Christian," he found open doors among religious people of all classes, and large assemblies listened to him.

Mr. Hastings began the publication of tracts as far back as 1853, and as the years passed he continued to write and print religious books, for the most part small, handy treatises. He developed a remarkably racy style, which was ever at the command of Gospel appeal, temperance advocacy, and social purity. For over thirty years he edited a monthly paper in Boston, U.S.A., called The Christian, also a series of essays entitled "The Anti-Infidel Library." In a statement of his publishing labours recently drawn up, we read that he had issued an unknown number of papers, books, tracts, and pamphlets, of which, during the last forty years, probably 800 tons have been scattered in every quarter of the earth.

His anti-infidel pamphlets and leaflets deserve more than a passing mention. Some fifty in number, they included "Nuts for Sceptics to Crack," "Friendly Hints to Candid Sceptics," "Was Moses Mistaken?" "Atheism and Arithmetic," "Who made the New Testament?" and "Infidel Testimony concerning the Truth of the Bible." Though these have proved of great service in the conflict with unbelief, they are less famous than the well-known lecture, "The Inspiration of the Bible; or, Will the Old Book Stand?" This sterling booklet has been translated into a score or more of languages, and attained a circulation of millions of copies. In controversy Mr. Hastings was well at home, but he knew where to draw the line. His controversy was, for the most part, with "them that are without," and to such he lectured on God and his claims, and the Gospel with its urgent demands. As regards Christian people, he was in the habit rather of calling them to consistency of life than of "correcting" them on disputed points of theology. "No name but Christian" was not a mere precept with him, but a principle by which to be guided in every department of life and ministry.

For some time Mr. Hastings stood forward in another controversy. In 1888, when no one was allowed to preach the Gospel upon the public grounds of the city of Boston, without a permit from a functionary who invariably refused to grant such permits, Mr. Hastings entered upon the work of outdoor preaching on Boston Common. For this he was prosecuted, and sent to prison. Through this bold action on the part of Mr. Hastings, public feeling was aroused, and the government which stood committed to such limitations and conduct was overturned. As a result, to use Mr. Hastings' own words: "The preaching of the Gospel on Boston Common is no longer entirely prohibited by the mandate of foreign-born rumsellers and their ecclesiastical superiors; and from this imprisonment for outdoor preaching, and other connected occurrences, not only has outdoor preaching greatly increased, but a protest against foreign dictation has been started which has spread across the continent, and produced results both momentous and far-reaching."

Mr. Hastings was the author of many hymns, which Christians have long read with profit, and in some cases sung with pleasure. The best-known of all is that beginning

> Shall we meet beyond the river,
> Where the surges cease to roll?

He has left a wife, who had been a true helpmeet for well-nigh forty-six years. With two sons and a daughter, Mrs. Hastings continues the publishing work in which, during such a long period, she has borne so large a part. Interesting glimpses of her remarkable life, and of the methods pursued by her husband and herself in the Lord's vineyard, are given in a book from her pen, entitled "Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim."

One of the most striking tributes to the goodness and industry of the departed labourer appeared in The Evangelical of Harrisburg, Pa., on October 31, from the pen of Rev. H. B. Hartzler. We make a brief extract:—

"His constant motto was, 'I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day: the night cometh.' He lived for others. The most intimate friends could know only in part what burdens he bore in silence, what deep soul-travail he experienced in the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ. His was a life of privation, exposure, self-denial, indomitable devotion, and herculean toils. The wonder is that the bent bow did not break years ago.

"Little did I think that we should meet on earth no more, when last we sang together, from his 'Songs of Pilgrimage,' these words and music of his own composition:

> "'Farewell, the parting hour has come,
> The sad word must be spoken,
> But still our hearts are linked with bonds
> That never can be broken.
> Redeemed in Christ, in Him made one,
> Not death nor hell can sever;
> The bonds of love that He hath bound,
> Have made us one for ever.'"

Thoughts on Sin.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

IV.—A Consequence (Rom. vi. 18).

"BEING made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." Among the spoils which Alexander the Great took rom Darius was a richly-jewelled cabinet or casket, in which the Persian king kept his perfumes. When Alexander got possession he turned it to another use. He placed in it his copy of Homer's "Iliad," and said: "This shall no longer be called myrrhbox, but Homer box." As the change of possession with regard to the box meant a change of use; so those who are freed from the servitude of sin have become the servants of righteousness.

There is no truth in the New Testament but has a practical application flowing from it. The detachment from sin, in the Gospel sense of the word, means attachment to Christ. The involution of the Spirit's life is followed by the evolution of the life in the Spirit. The destruction of the old man is the precursor of the construction of the new man. Salvation by Christ is supplemented by sanctification in Him.

The "in Christ" of position and possession is proved by the "Christ in us" of power and practice. The liberty which the Gospel of God's grace bestows leads to the lordship of the Spirit, which it claims; and the enrichment in Christ with all spiritual blessings is evidenced by the enduement of the Spirit, which makes the blessings living forces in spiritual lives.

Benares.—Mrs. Hewlett, who is working among Hindu and Mohammedan women and girls in Benares, North India, will be glad to know of a lady ready to go to India at her own charges, and share her (Mrs. Hewlett's) home and work. Miss Ada Brett, of 24, Queen's Road, Tunbridge Wells, will kindly give any information respecting Mrs. Hewlett and her work at Shanti Kothi, Benares, North India.

The War in South Africa.

The S.A. General Mission.

I WROTE my last letter from Delagoa Bay, where I was waiting patiently the arrival of our missionary refugees from Swazieland. This awful war had just commenced, and the refugees were pouring down by coal-truck loads, men, women, and children, from the Transvaal. The short-term prisoners had all been turned out of the Johannesburg and Barberton gaols and come over the border—a motley crew indeed—and were soon pretty busy stealing and drinking in town. Also 1,300 Cape coloured people came down and encamped near the railway station. These the Relief Committee asked me to see were duly fed, a work which took up a good deal of time. The canteens were doing a tremendous trade, and the bad houses were full.

It is indeed a sad sight to see, and when we turned from these it was only to find the respectable turned out of house and home, having had to leave their all behind. Shipload after shipload left for Natal and Cape Colony. I was able at last to gather all our missionaries, and our native evangelist and his wife; and, after numberless difficulties, got them on board the Tintagel Castle. She had been taken by the Relief Committee, and was crammed with passengers, over 2,000 being on board. Pickpockets and other vicious men were amongst the number; but, in spite of this, splendid discipline was kept, great credit being due to Captain Harris and his officers. During my absence, martial law had been proclaimed in Natal, and we found there would be difficulties in the way of landing our natives. However, the Lord cleared the way, and after a month of very trying experiences we stood round the table in our mission house, with hearts overflowing with praise as we sang, "How good is the God we adore!"

It is sad to think of our five mission houses and four churches being closed in Swazieland, as well as mission house and church at Ingogo. In the former place work was progressing in a marked way. Now all is at a standstill. We ask readers to pray that the young converts may be kept steadfast; that this awful war may soon end; also that our missionaries, on returning, may find a deepened work in the hearts of the native Christians and many others seeking the Lord.

The population of Durban during the last three months has nearly doubled, and we are having splendid open-air meetings, and doing what we can to reach the refugees.

W. Spencer Walton.

Durban, November 8.

Army Scripture Readers.

We have also a letter from Colonel Sandwith, treasurer of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, descriptive of the readers and their work. The authorities have permitted this Society and the Soldiers' Friend Society to send out six of their Scripture readers, the War Office giving facility. To meet the extra charges of sending these men out and maintaining them in the field, and of filling the vacancies in the stations from which they have been drawn, the committee of the Society are making a special appeal. A leaflet giving full particulars may be had from Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith, Mendip Lodge, Godalming, Surrey.

Painful Letter from Vryburg.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke writes from 22, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.:—Too late for your last issue of The Christian was an important letter which we received from Rev. R. Olver, of Vryburg, known to many by his labours in Devonshire. The letter took six weeks to get through, having been carried by a civil servant for 200 miles, and posted at Krankiul. It shows that there are other heroes in South Africa besides those on the field of battle, and Christians at home will not forget in their prayers and gifts men who are hazarding the loss of all things, and staying at the post of duty, as Mr. Olver is at Vryburg. The Emergency Fund of the Colonial Missionary Society has now reached nearly £700; but what is that among so many? Mr. Olver says:—

"For three weeks we have been cut off from the outside world: no newspaper or telegraph has reached us. At the present moment 1,000 Boers are in the town. We have, however, up to the present, no reason to complain of the manner in which we have been treated. What is in the future for us I know not. A large number of our people have left the town. The poor are still with us, and I am left practically without means. And yet I feel that my place is here, and here I intend to stay. That there is a hard and very trying time before us I am quite sure. Our food supply is very limited. Already provisions have gone up 200 or 300 per cent., and in a week they will be much higher. There is no possibility of getting supplies, as the line is broken up both north and south.

"I feel sure I shall have the sympathy and practical assistance of the Colonial Missionary Society at this season of great need. But I do so, feeling sure that in a few months the calamity will have passed."

Mr. Olver adds an earnest plea for many "poor whites" in Vryburg who at the time of his writing were near "a state of starvation." He concludes, "Do your best for us, but for Heaven's sake do it promptly!"

From De Aar.

Dear Sir,—Five hundred miles from Cape Town, in the Karoo, we have one most important railway junction. Here the war authorities have established their base, keeping a certain number of troops always on the spot, whilst others remain temporarily and then pass on to the front. The wounded are to be sent here, the railway school-house being turned into a hospital. We are under martial law, and stringent regulations are in force.

The commanding officers have, nevertheless, granted us every facility towards opening a Camp Soldiers' Home, which is now meeting a great need, from 500 to 600 men nightly taking advantage of it. How to give an idea on paper of the need is difficult, or of the dreary desert waste: the air filled with fine suffocating dust, intense heat at times, heavy work for the men. Nor is it possible to describe their keen appreciation of the little haven of rest we have been able to provide for them. In addition to a yard seated roughly and lighted by railway-lamps, we have now been helped by friends to pitch a marquee, which will be used as a reading and writing tent and in the evenings for meetings. We are deeply thankful for the spirit manifested in these meetings, and for the numbers attending them.

Whilst we have several volunteers from the railway camp helping, the need of more workers is great. We are hoping that those belonging to the S.A.G.M. may join us, and that the Y.M.C.A., Cape Town, may send two delegates to unite with us in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association. Thus we should be enabled to work one or two marquees in this camp, and, we trust, send help to other camps as well. The expenses are great, as all provisions have to be sent from Cape Town. The soldiers receive English pay, and cannot afford more than English prices. All, therefore, that is sold to them is sold at a loss, not covering the outlay.—Yours sincerely,

S. B. and M. S. Osborn Howe.

De Aar Camp, Cape Colony.

NATIONAL WAIFS' ASSOCIATION

(Otherwise known as "DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES").

Over 5,000 Orphan or Waif Children are now in the Homes. Among these Children there are 734 LITTLE INCURABLES, Deaf and Dumb, Blind, Crippled or otherwise Afflicted Children. EIGHT SOULS are added every 24 hours to this Great Family.

38,767 Waifs have already been rescued by the Homes. Of these 10,660 trained Boys and Girls have been successfully placed out in the Colonies, and more than 22,000 sent to Sea or placed in Situations in Great Britain, &c.

Some conception of the extent of the work may be formed from the fact that during the last Two Years no fewer than 4,655 Fresh Cases have been admitted—a number probably in excess of admissions by all other existing Societies put together.

No really Destitute Child has ever been refused admission.

THIS advance has naturally increased the expenditure; so much so, that on March the 31st last the Committee were left to face a deficit on the General Fund of £11,087—now reduced to about £8,050. The expenditure for 1898-9 was the highest in the history of the Society.

The Committee are reluctantly compelled to contemplate retrenchment. This practically means curtailment of the Mission. They have decided, however, first to make this General Appeal, in the hope that they may have the prayers and the generous and liberal assistance of God's people in this immediate and most anxious matter.

A MOST REMARKABLE YEAR.

Dear Friends,—I venture very earnestly to ask a renewal of your kind and valued help on behalf of this Society.

The present has been by far the most remarkable year in the forty-seven years' history of the Mission, and its good work has extended and widened in an unprecedented degree.

Great Races and Fairs have been missioned all over the country, in many instances by a large staff of our evangelists, through whose devoted and intrepid labours God has been pleased to call many souls from darkness to light, and to win them from the service of Satan to the happy discipleship of Christ.

Scores, if not hundreds, have thus come under our immediate notice this year as trophies of the power of God, and miracles of His grace. How many more there must be who have, unknown to ourselves, been savingly influenced, and of whom we shall never hear till the Great Day!

The spiritual movement which has taken place among the people is indeed most remarkable, and fraught with encouragement. On the Racecourse, at the Fair, on the Sea Beach, in the Village, and on the crowded City highway they have listened, often in hundreds, sometimes in thousands, for hours together at the services held by our Society. The power of the Word of God has transfixed them, and they have been rooted to the spot in spite of themselves. The Spirit of God has been mightily poured out upon such assemblies, and anxious souls have pressed forward to be spoken and prayed with individually. Thus, over and over again, the haunt of pleasure or of sin has become a consecrated place, Heaven has illuminated its darkness, and Salvation has glorified the scene! Weeping eyes, penitent sobs, broken prayers, sincere acceptances of Christ—these we have witnessed again and again in the most unlikely places.

The work has, indeed, now extended so widely that we need, more than ever, constant prayer and support. A continual inflow of funds is absolutely necessary to maintain the work in efficiency, and this too often is sadly lacking, and our efforts are sorely handicapped by want of means.

At the present moment we are without funds, and have heavy calls and claims to meet, and much winter work before us. We have very earnestly striven this year to increase the annual income by at least another £1,000 to defray the enlarged expenditure. But at present only about £350 of this extra amount has been received, and our financial year is rapidly drawing to a close.

Can you very kindly help us in this emergency, and strengthen our hands for the continual warfare we seek to sustain?

Our opportunities for special Gospel service are almost boundless. Last year we reached more than 700 towns and villages, evangelised more than 800 Races, Fairs and Fêtes, distributed more than a million Gospel publications, and held about 2,500 services.

This year all these figures will be largely increased, and the number of those attending our services will reach hundreds of thousands.

The Committee will be deeply grateful if you can respond to this appeal.—I am, yours faithfully,

FRANK COCKREM (Secretary).

URGENT.

To complete the Good Samaritan Work of the

"Liberator" Relief Fund.

After seven years' earnest pleading, a further £10,000, or 200,000 shillings, still urgently needed to give relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life-savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse, in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age.

Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the Law of Christ."

There are 2,830 cases on the Books of the Fund, of whom 1,500 are Widows of Spinsters. 690 are over 70 years of age. 1,430 are over 60 years of age. Over 300 deaths through the disaster.

THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP

CHRISTMAS RELIEF

FOR

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS

THE AGED, AFFLICTED, AND INVALID POOR

("Especially unto them who are of the Household of Faith,")

IN

CLOTHING, GROCERIES, AND COALS.

THE OBJECT.

I. To seek out the cases of those who would hide rather than expose their need—who would work for their self-support but are debarred, some permanently by great age or bodily affliction, some temporarily by sickness—in short,

The Deserving Respectable Poor.

II. To accompany the relief of bodily necessities with such praise, prayer and ministry as will lead the soul up to God as the One from whom every good and perfect gift comes.

THE PLAN.

I. Each case is vouched for by an experienced Christian worker constantly visiting the house.

II. At every distribution to those able to attend, a Service will be held, including a brief address to those who are resting on Christ, and those who have not yet been led to His feet.

III. When the person to be relieved is too aged or infirm to attend a distribution, the relief will be delivered by a Christian friend personally, and be accompanied with the reading of the Holy Scriptures and prayer.

Our desire is that what Christian friends enable us to distribute may be recognised by the poor as gifts from God through His people, and be enjoyed quietly in their homes.

Any gifts for this purpose will be gratefully received by

J. W. C. Fegan.

Home Missions.

George Yard, Whitechapel.

By an Occasional Visitor.

GEORGE YARD MISSION has been for many years a familar centre of vigorous Christian effort. Its name is a household word. The results of its work are to be seen on every hand. What countless thousands have listened within its walls to the glorious Gospel story! If those trim benches could speak, what thrilling facts would they proclaim of the hungry being fed, the naked clothed, the widow and orphan sheltered and succoured, of weary sinners finding a sin-pardoning God!

Its agencies for the spiritual enlightenment and social amelioration of the people are so manifold that their mere enumeration would demand considerable space. But the venerable superintendent, Mr. George Holland, modestly disclaims any merit in the matter. It is the Lord's work, and he but the humble instrument.

A brief inspection of the premises is in itself an education in evangelistic work, especially when accompanied by Mr. Holland's reminiscent description of the genesis and growth of the work. Behind the plain brick frontage on Whitechapel Road one finds a number of extensive and lofty buildings, which are a veritable hive of industry from early morning till late at night, resounding with the hum of school, the hymn of evangelistic gathering, or the merry conversation of 100 factory girls as they assemble for a Bible class. In spite of the continual use by thousands of people, one is struck by the remarkable cleanliness everywhere evidenced.

A pathetic interest attaches to the chief portions of the premises, for so far-reaching and well-consolidated a work has not been raised in this without toil and suffering, tears and prayers. The hall, for instance, crowded out at mission services, not merely forty years since, but at the present time, was once a distillery. The adjacent room, so neatly adorned with texts, came to Mr. Holland as a direct answer to prayer. Shaftesbury House, in notorious Angel Alley, was frequently visited by the great and good Earl of Shaftesbury, formerly president of the institutions, who many a time climbed the stairs into the simple office, and there discussed plans for further development.

Let us glance at the children's work, concerning which Lord Shaftesbury said: "Keep that going, George, whatever you do!" Careful teaching, on approved kindergarten lines, is combined with spiritual direction, and a kindly, practical interest in each child's welfare. The little one is not simply a unit to count in an examination. He or she is shepherded and protected. The starving are fed and the naked clothed. The sickly are nursed at a country home of rest in golden furze-clad Surrey. The education is of the best, and old scholars are continually sending warm words of keen appreciation and remembrance, even from the uttermost parts of the earth. Another room, bright as busy hands can make it, is set apart for the infants' day nursery, while in other rooms any of the school children who may suddenly be rendered homeless—no remote contingency among the very poor who live on the fringe of the land of incipient starvation—are temporarily housed and fed. Some, indeed, look gratefully to Mr. Holland as their sole guardian. They are growing up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

In the biting days of winter the value of the work is accentuated. George Yard becomes more than ever a blessing to the children of the poor. Now that Londoners have been rudely but very rightly awakened to the fact that so many thousands of its little ones go breakfastless to school, we may well recall that Mr. Holland has for long years contended for feeding the hungry before teaching them. No boy or girl at George Yard ever goes short of food. Well is the sanctified common-sense of the management known and understood. Everybody recognises that what is done is for Jesus Christ's sake, and the place seems hallowed by this blessed fact.

The work among adults is on a large scale. Every one of the numerous rooms has its use. The front part of the upper portion of the main buildings contains a parlour and recreation rooms for young women. They were furnished by Lord Kinnaird, in memory of his esteemed mother. In a capacious classroom the Bible-class meets. It is attended, not only on Sundays, but on ordinary weeknights, by numbers of women and girls. A place of assembly is provided, too, for the Good Influence Club—one of the many useful undertakings which have grown out of the original organization. The members take a special delight in aggressive Gospel work. An important branch, that of training girls for domestic service, is carried on at a country home, and the demand for servants from the institution is amazing even in these days of the general cry, "Give us servants."

The mothers' meeting supplies yet another illustration of the spiritual life of the Mission. The room that is used is filled at each meeting, and the audience of overflows on to the stairs. Poor though they be, many of these poor mothers are consistent Christians, witnessing for the truth amid dark surroundings. One notes their keen appreciation of scriptural teaching, their simplicity and reverence. The only regret is that, owing to the changing conditions of life in London, and the general migration of well-to-do people to the suburbs, it is increasingly difficult to obtain teachers. Mr. Holland will welcome new workers.

On one chief point, however, it seems right to lay special stress. In spite of the careful economy which is exercised in each department, the expenses are necessarily large. The financial burden weighs heavily upon the venerable founder and superintendent. Moreover, another and larger country home of rest for the sick and suffering poor is an absolute necessity. Surely this Christmas season is an opportune time for aiding, generously and well, so noble a monument of Christian love and benevolence as the George Yard Mission, the address of which is High Street, Whitechapel, E.

Among London Poor.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE visitation in the streets and lanes of our great City brings to light many a sorrowful experience of great need and suffering, as, from sketches supplied by Mildmay Deaconesses, did space permit, we could prove.

How the mournful story is repeated—"small earnings," "lack of food," "often without a fire," even on days when the wind is cold and cutting, and we are glad to wrap round us the warmest cloaks we have. And how pitifully often has a poor mother to say, "If it wasn't for the baby, I feel I could get on," though she loves the little mite with a mother's clinging love, and struggles hard to nourish it.

Scarcely less pitiful is the lot of widows and lonely women, almost starving on the scanty pittance they earn or receive from the parish, and for all these we need winter help.

Wherever relief is taken, the message of a Saviour's love goes with it, and loving ministry opens the way for its acceptance. Time is hastening on, and as we look up with "a good hope through grace," and like to think that

The life that knows no ending,
The tearless life, is there, let us do what we can, before "the tearless life" comes, to dry some of the tears that fall from many eyes in this "night of weeping"—the night which, when our Blessed Master appears again, will be succeeded by a long "morning of joy"—when He will not forget any work and labour of love shown towards his name in ministering to his poor ones here on earth.

Open Doors in Prisons.

FOR many years the Prison Mission prayed with intense importunity for prisoners, individually and collectively, with apparently little result. The first grand response was granted years ago, which was the opening of the "Gate" to us in a partial way. The great masters of the situation were suspicious of us as women, believed to be of no account in God's service. Women were bound by strict laws while in prison, and women prisoners could only be seen one at a time by a visitor.

The first permission given us was a very "open door" indeed. It was given only to me when the old prison at Westminster opened its gates; but the entrance was very wide. It was permitted to me to gather together every female prisoner within its walls into one place, and often it was in the chapel itself. Babies born in prison were freely given to the lady visiting for me to convey it to a home, instead of sending it to the workhouse. The authorities were liberal in this case; but the sympathy of the Christian public, unfortunately, was not with prison work, and great pain was suffered by us on this account. The poor children were kept in legal bondage in the workhouse until their parents came out of prison.

We contrived to get a clause in an Act of Parliament by which we rescued them and became their guardians until the age of sixteen. Their numbers became so great that we at last got permission to set up our school, the Princess Mary Village Homes, where they now receive training in the way they should go, and, praise God! many choose this voluntarily. After a time, entrance into prisons was refused us, but unceasing prayer went up that the Lord would open a door of hope for these

SOULS IN DARKNESS.

We began to send out letters at Christmas, containing the Gospel message to all the British prisons, as well as to prisons in foreign lands. Twenty thousand letters went out from our Clapham centre last year, and the Lord is blessing this agency to the conversion of souls, many thus hearing the Gospel in their own tongue, who might otherwise never have heard it. The appreciation of chaplains and governors, and their testimony to the good received from them by the prisoners, is very cheering. We see now the wisdom of our exclusion from the prisons; we have received a larger sphere instead.

The administrators of our prison laws are now men who like missions, and who, with wisdom and enlightened Christian purpose, are opening wide the prison doors to armies of Christian soldiers, who proclaim the "glad tidings," and who labour in prisons, and preach Christ, and invite the prisoners of crime to enter the "glorious liberty" wherewith Christ Jesus makes free. This onward progress that we now see in prisons is the true footmark of the Lord. He had prepared the pathway of service by the simple ministry of women, and his strong servants are now going forward to conquer the foe; they are now fighting for Him against the terrible enemy of souls, who, like a "strong man armed, keepeth his goods."

But the battle is the Lord's, and they will be victorious all along the line. The Lord is giving them the triumph of "still holding the fort," into which He had brought whom Satan had kept in bondage for so many years. Many of these ransomed ones are still steadily labouring in Christian freedom in our laundry at Clapham, and showing in their lives the evidence of their change of heart.

Dear friends, I want you to join us in praise and thanksgiving for the prisoners and captives, and to ask for more and more blessing for them and for us, and for all workers on prison lines. We and all such need prayers to be made for us; the work is discouraging and the ground is hard. I feel bound to write to the readers of The Christian these words, for I have indeed seen the Lord placing the poor criminal, who had been the off-scouring of the earth, "among princes;" and she who had been "lifted from a dunghill" having her seat in the chief places, and her food from the hand of One whose table is royal.

I hope this little reminiscence of mine may be helpful to some. As I look back on our start of the Prison Mission at Nine Elms, and see the progress of our Mission at Clapham, I can only say that I am unworthy of the least of his mercies, and I pray that efforts for the lost and wandering ones to be found in prisons may increase and grow fourfold in the year 1900, and the harvest increase more and more "till He come." I would cordially invite all friends interested in prisons, or workers on such lines, to join us in prayer at the Conference Hall, Clapham, any Wednesday at 10 a.m.

We need "showers of blessing," for it is prayer alone that "moves the arm that moves the world."—Yours in the fellowship of his service, Susanna Meredith.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 17.

Teach Us to Pray.—Luke xi. 1-15.

THERE is no teacher such as Christ. He was a Master in the art of prayer, and has taught all the greatest intercessors among the sons of men. From the days of St. Paul to those of George Müller, his students have been the most conspicuous in their mastery of the art of prayer. His own example has been their incentive. It was because they saw him praying that one of his disciples asked Him to teach them how to pray—an example this of the power of unconscious influence. If a lad prays in the school bedroom, he will be almost sure to start others praying.

Be perfectly natural in prayer. Do not "repeat" prayers the face of which has become worn away by constant usage. Glance through the hours which are approaching. Find out approximately what your needs will be. Ask for the needed grace as a child of a Father. Be definite. You had better be brief and definite than general and prolix.

Intercede for others. Do not use exclusively, "I," "me," and "my;" but "we," "our," "us." See how Christ interwove intercession with every petition of the Disciples' Prayer, as recorded here. Also in the following parable, notice it is the friend who comes for his friend, not for himself. Our poor friends come off the journey of life, footsore and weary, and we find ourselves often with nothing to set before them; but we know that our great Friend, God, has enough and to spare. In our daily prayer we, therefore, approach Him earnestly on their behalf, and if he of the parable was roused from his comfortable bed by importunity, how much more will God be touched by nobler and holier arguments.

Be sure to receive as well as ask. No beggar is content with asking. He plies his errand until he receives. Alas, that we so often are content to ask with no thought of receiving! One of the deepest conditions of successful prayer is contained in the words, "Believe that ye have received." Before we rise from our knees, having pleaded for something that is contained in the Divine promises, we should dare to believe that we do receive the petitions that we have desired. Notice these three remarkable words: Receive, Find, Opened. We receive gifts; we find clues to hidden mysteries; we are admitted through open doors into the secret places of the Most High.

We must exercise a living faith in God's Fatherhood. The little child who asks a loaf of his father reckons on his father's character that he will not mock his hunger. Judge God by the love which is in the heart of men, only remember that they are evil and He is good. You may fairly reckon upon Him. "Have faith in God" really means reckon on God's faithfulness to you. Do not look at your faith. He who is ever considering his health will become an invalid; he who always looks down at his faith will cut up the very roots from which faith grows, will shut out the beam by which faith lives. Look away to the character of God—the faithful God, who keepeth covenant and mercy for ever.

You must leave the ultimate answers to your prayer when they concern matters which are not included in the promises of God to his infinite wisdom. Not unfrequently, to reverse our Lord's words, children ask stones and not bread, entreat for scorpions and not fish. Under such circumstances it is wise and good of God to say No, and to give us what we would ask if we knew all as He does. When we get to heaven we shall have to thank Him, as much for the unanswered as for the answered prayers. We shall go up to our Father, and thank Him that He knew better than we did.

Be sure to give the Master time to teach you how to pray. It is necessary to wait for Him, when we feel less earnest, as when the fire burns most vehemently. He likes regular hours for his pupils, and that they should not hurry impetuously away from his gracious words. F. B. M.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Christian Endeavour Motto for 1900 is to be "Thy Kingdom Come."

The arrangements for the 1900 Convention at Wembley Park are going forward satisfactorily.

More than 560 societies have been affiliated with the C.E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland during the past year.

Dr. Clark has started, "The Macedonian Phalanx," an enrolment of members of Endeavour Societies, who will undertake to support, or partially support, a missionary in the foreign field.

The fifth annual Convention of the German Y.P.S.C.E. was held in Berlin early in October. The whole tone of the Convention was deeply spiritual, the one theme of the meetings being "Be ye full of the Spirit."

"He Careth for You."

"Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (1 Pet. v. 7).

YOU throw your crumbs to the sparrows in your garden, and you feed the ducks in the pond without ever thinking that in so doing you are God's little servants. Yet so it is. The birds are the creatures of his hands; and because He cares for them, He suggests to us the thought of giving them food. You have seen a horse shake some corn out of his nose-bag, and it looked like a waste of food; but our heavenly Father, in his care for the sparrows, sent them to gather it up, "so that nothing be lost." You see, God cares for the sparrows, and they flit about as merrily as can be, and hop and chirp without the slightest care as to where the next meal is to come from. It is just as though our little feathered friends cast all their care upon God because He careth for them.

Now, if God cares for the sparrows, how much more does He care for you? Jesus said, "Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Therefore, take no thought, saying, 'What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed?' for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." Of course, you have not the cares which men and women have—you cannot be expected to be burdened as they often are with care; still you have your little anxieties and worries—for instance, your lessons are difficult, or you meet with disappointment, or you feel you are very naughty at times—and it is well for you to know what to do with these cares as they come: you should cast them upon God, because He careth for you. And if you are able to do this in your youth, you will save yourself many a weary load in after life.

When misfortune comes our hearts are heavy with care; then we should roll our burden upon God, for in our misfortune He careth for us. A well-known German preacher relates an incident which occurred in his own village, and which shows how God can use a bird to carry out his will, just as He fed Elijah through the ravens in the days of old. A poor man sat at his cottage door expecting every moment that his goods would be seized because he owed a debt. Presently a little bird appeared overhead, and fluttered to and fro as if in trouble, then flew into the cottage door. The man closed the door, caught the bird, and placed it safely in a cage. Shortly after there was a knock at his door, and he feared the worst; but on opening it he found a servant there who was in search of the bird, which belonged to her mistress, the neighbours having told her of its flight into the poor man's cottage. He was glad to be able to restore it to its rightful owner. Ere long the servant returned with the heartiest thanks of her mistress, and requested him to accept a present for the restoration of her beautiful singing bird, which she valued very highly. On opening the packet he found it contained the very amount of his debt for which he expected his goods would be seized. God had been caring for the man all the time, and had supplied his need, because He loved him. So really there was no need for him to carry the burden himself, but he should have cast it entirely upon God.

I remember when a lad seeing here and there in the streets of London a high bench, upon which it was intended that men who were heavily laden should rest their burdens, and on one of them were the words—

"REST, BUT DO NOT LOITER."

The bench was as high as a man's shoulder, so that a boy carrying a load on his head could also rest it there. So God is always by our side, and says to each of us, "Cast your care upon Me; for I am caring for you." "Come unto Me," says Jesus, "and I will give you rest." We can each lose our burden of sin at the cross of Jesus; for "He bare our sins in his own body on the tree." "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." So, you see, whatever our cares or anxieties may be, there is no need for us to carry them ourselves, when God, through the psalmist, says, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee;" and repeats through Peter, "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."

The "Plain" Girl.

Once I knew a little girl,
Very plain;
You might try her hair to curl,
All in vain;
On her cheek no tints of rose
Paled and blushed, or sought repose:
She was plain.

But the thoughts that through her brain
Came and went,
As a recompense for pain,
Angels sent;
So full of many a beauteous thing,
In her young soul blossoming
Gave content.

Every thought was full of grace,
Pure and true:
And in time the homely face
Lovelier grew;
With a heavenly radiance bright,
From the soul's reflected light
Shining through.

So I tell you, little child,
Plain or poor,
If your thoughts are undefiled
You are sure
Of the loveliness of worth;
And this beauty, not of earth,
Will endure.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

EIGHTH WEEK OF GENERAL MEETINGS (December 3-9).

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE reports given in on December 4 on the work of the preceding week were of the most satisfactory character. Mr. William Thomson, jun., in speaking of the children's meetings which he had conducted in Dalmarnock United Presbyterian Church, mentioned that on the Monday no fewer than forty-eight boys and girls professed to have found the Saviour, and that on the Tuesday there were fifty more, while before the close of the week these numbers were doubled every evening. Mr. Samuel McKenzie, who had been in charge of the Mission in Kinning Park Free Church (Rev. Archibald Russell), Scotland Street, told of a young man who was found at the close of the service one evening in a state of stupor. When he came round he burst into tears, and said that he had been overwhelmed by the Word. His life had hitherto been dissolute, but he had now received the Saviour. Mr. Frank Weaver had also a successful report to give of the work in which he and his brother have been engaged in the district of Anderston (Free St. Mark's Church). Something of the hardness of the soil may be gathered from the fact of the attendance of sixty drunken men at one meeting; but the power of the Word was such that many even of these were impressed.

Rev. Robert Campbell said that the results of the mission in his church (Calton United Presbyterian) excelled anything he had experienced in connection with previous work of the kind. Anxious inquirers and soul-winners got to close quarters, with most manifest and blessed results. Rev. James Cameron said that any doubt that existed in his congregation (Victoria Free) had been dispelled on the Sabbath evening, when there was a general break down, and a large number professed decision for Christ.

AFTERNOON SERVICES.

As we intimated in our last issue, a new series of afternoon services has been begun in Renfield Street United Presbyterian Church (Rev. Andrew Forrest), which, like St. George's Church, is situated on one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city. Indeed, its only drawback lies in the noise of the traffic outside. Ladies are now admitted, the galleries being reserved for them; and the response was so immediate that at the first meeting practically the whole of this space was required to accommodate those who came, while the floor of the church was completely packed by the male portion of the audience.

Before entering upon his address, Rev. John McNeill expressed great pleasure at the large congregation. Speaking on the word "Come," he said this appeal was extended to the Christless man and the sinner; and it seemed as if the word had been specially left at the end of the Bible as a message for such as they. Illustrating from the readiness with which the Queen's "commands" to dine with her are obeyed, he dwelt on the necessity of listening to the appeal, and concluded by asking his hearers to "come" just as they were, for God would accept them.

THE PRESENT POSITION.

In connection with the monthly meeting of the Free Presbytery of Glasgow, on Tuesday, a conference was held on the subject of the Evangelistic Campaign, and Mr. McNeill was asked to give an address. Referring to the great change which had come over the Scottish churches, in their attitude to evangelistic work, within the last twenty years, Mr. McNeill said that a week's special meetings had come to be regarded as part of the ordinary work of a congregation. While he believed in the regular ministry, he was glad to see signs that something else is being called for. Looking back to his own origin religiously, he felt that it came through the steady service of the Sabbath day—nothing sensational, nothing exciting, but a kind of preaching which would be considered now as not very lively. When Mr. Moody made his memorable visit, he never heard that evangelist speak; but his minister caught the evangelist fire, and it put a little more edge on the preaching.

Dr. Ross Taylor said he had found to his immense satisfaction that, under a conventional manner, there was a great deal of religious earnestness among the people. With regard to the present movement generally, there appeared to be ground for saying that the tide of feeling was distinctly rising. He believed they were in the enjoyment of a very special time of blessing, and it was for each one to make full use of the opportunity God had offered.

LESSONS FROM THE PAST.

In the course of a three days' missionary conference (December 2, 3, 4) in Finnieston Free Church, of which Rev. David M. Macintyre is minister, Monday evening was set apart for hearing and praying about "Days of Blessing" in our own land. The meeting was a most interesting one, and showed how closely the present Evangelistic Campaign is linked in the minds of many with the great doings of the Lord in bygone days.

The principal speaker was Rev. John Macpherson (Dundee), who gave a vivid account of some of his personal experiences during the years 1859-61. He traced the beginning of that revival to a little daily prayer meeting started by two Christian men in New York in 1858, which was the forerunner of "union" prayer meetings all over the United States. All sectarian barriers were thrown down. The whole Church seemed to be revived, and literally tens of thousands were "added to the Lord."

"This work crossed the Atlantic. A young man in Belfast spoke to his companion, and they had a special season of prayer. The same result followed as in America, and everywhere there were wonderful answers to prayer. The news spread to this country, and many ministers went over to Ireland. When they returned they seemed to carry the fire with them, and the people to be prepared for it. All over Scotland—in city, town, and rural district—little gatherings of young men met together of their own accord for prayer. Not one of them knew what conversion meant experimentally; but they were seeking to know, and the blessing came to them. This was a movement of prayer, rather than of preaching."

Dealing with developments in the neighbourhood of Dundee, Mr. Macpherson told the story of a great open-air mission which he—along with Duncan Matheson and George Campbell—had conducted. "On the last day of the meetings we were despairing: not a single indication was there of the Spirit's power. We three left the crowd, and went a little distance to pray, continuing for two hours. Meanwhile, the people followed us. As we ceased praying heavy rain came, and the people were scattering. I said 'Perhaps the Lord has sent the rain to try us.' Duncan Matheson called out this to the people, and they remained. In a few minutes the Holy Spirit came, and many hundreds were saved."

Speaking of "the quality of the conversions," Mr. Macpherson said the conviction of sin was deep and thorough. There was a sense of the holiness of God, of the sweetness of his love, and of the preciousness of the blood of Christ. Emphasis was laid on the fact that there were wonderfully few backsliders. "I am told there is a good deal of backsliding now. That is due to the lighter kind of work that has been going on in recent years."

IN THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

For two weeks a successful mission has been in progress in Wynd Free Church, Crown Street (Rev. John Riddell). This congregation has been through all its history closely identified with special times of blessing. In earlier days the church was located in the heart of the slum district of the city, and many a wave of spiritual life went out from it far over the land. With its location removed far to the south, its pastor (himself with a name widely known for aggressive work) is leading it still in the same path.

The meetings for the first week were addressed by Rev. James Robertson, junior (Edinburgh); and last week the leadership was taken by Rev. Irving Armstrong (Hull). We visited it on the evening of a day of continuous rain (Wednesday), but found that a faithful band of open-air singers and speakers were not to be deterred by the weather. Thanksgivings were offered that the Lord had come into the midst night after night, laying his mighty but gentle hand on one here and another there.

Mr. Armstrong sang his own experience in the words of the hymn, "Jehovah Tsidkenu" (McCheyne.) From Isaiah xlv. 25, and by comparison with the story of the Brazen Serpent, the conditions of God's Plan of Salvation were very simply explained. I. Repentance: (1) knowledge of; (2) sorrow for; and (3) turning from sin. II. Faith. Four classes of sinners were dealt with—(1) those who are too bad, (2) those who are too good, (3) those who have never seen a perfect Christian, and (4) those who are trying to improve themselves before coming.

An excellent spirit was manifest through the whole gathering. Few left before the after-meeting, when there was much liberty in prayer. Anxious ones waited, and showed a disposition to speak of spiritual things. Above all, the Lord gave the blessing, and souls were saved.

THE NORTHERN OUTSKIRTS.

Rev. Simeon R. Macphail (Liverpool) has been, during the past fortnight, evangelizing at Eastpark Free Church, in the Maryhill district. The minister of the congregation (Rev. John White) tells with gratitude of the Lord manifesting Himself in gracious power, and of souls born again. Mr. Macphail's addresses are marked by an unusual amount of valuable teaching, put in a way simple enough to reach the youngest heart.

On the evening of our visit heavy rain has been falling for several hours, but a good congregation, of all ages, was assembled in the church. By a skilful use of materials an interesting object-lesson was given to the children, on writing materials, based on 2 Cor. iii. 3. Rags of different kinds were used to show what could be done in making paper from unpromising materials. But, while there are limitations to man's ability in this direction, God can make all as white as snow.

The message to the adults was a searching word on the choosings by Solomon (1 Kings iii. 9), and the Levites (Exodus xxxii. 26). The steps in Solomon's career were pointed out in God's three visits to him—(1) to approve his choice, (2) to accept his work and to warn, (3) to reject. Solomon's snare was shown to have been "officialism." Levi's history was traced from "a bad start," through an unpromising career, to this sudden turning to the Lord. "That is what we call conversion." In the after-meeting there was abundant evidence of a real work for God going on in the hearts of the people.

In a letter to one of the workers, a young man wrote:—"I feel a great change in my life since you pointed out the way of salvation. I saw how I had been throwing away my life to the devil, and when I think of how I have spent God's money on drink and evil companions, theatres, &c., it makes me feel a very guilty sinner. I thank God now that I have got into a good company of young men belonging to ——— mission. You will be glad to hear that the brother of the young man along with me, who was going fast astray, is also trusting in the Lord. We are going to the Campaign meetings every night. Oh, how my heart yearns for Him since I got my eyes opened to the light. What a blessed Saviour He can be."

Obituary.

WE have received intelligence from Mr. Ira D. Sankey of the death, at Plainfield, New Jersey, of Dr. Robert Lowry, the esteemed author of so many well-known hymns. Dr. Lowry was a Baptist minister, then professor of Belles-Lettres at Lewisburg University, and subsequently Chancellor of that University. For a number of years he had held no charge owing to his deafness, and he devoted most of his time to the composition of hymns. Dr. Lowry considered "Weeping will not save me" as the most evangelical hymn he ever wrote. Some of his best-known pieces are: "Shall we gather at the river?" "One more day's work for Jesus," "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" "I need Thee every hour," "The mistakes of my life."

MR. W. H. PROTHEROE.

The death is announced of Mr. William Henry Protheroe, Bourn House, Leytonstone, which took place on the 2nd inst., at the age of fifty-three. He was the only son of Mr. Alexander Protheroe, who, with Mr. Thomas Morris, founded the well-known firm of Protheroe and Morris, horticultural auctioneers and nurserymen. At the age of sixteen he was sent to complete his technical education at the Government Horticultural College, at Ghent, Belgium. After three years he returned to England with the highest honours which the college could confer. In 1873 he took his father's place in the business, in which capacity he was actively engaged until a few days before his death. Mr. Protheroe, though fond of privacy and retirement, was an earnest member of the Leytonstone Congregational Church, of which for some time he acted as secretary. He was of a particularly kind and unassuming disposition, and his thoughtfulness for the welfare of others was ever manifest in charitable deeds, which were a source of constant pleasure to him.

MRS ELLEN NEWMAN.

At St. Neot's, Hunts, on December 2, after a short illness, there passed away, at the age of seventy-eight, Mr. Ellen Newman, who for more than thirty-one years had been a faithful preacher of the Gospel. Converted in 1854, through the instrumentality of Robert Aitken, Mrs. Newman at once commenced seeking to win souls for the Master by visiting from house to house in the village of Bampton, Oxfordshire. These efforts were greatly blessed to many. In the year 1868, while standing at an open-air service in Douglas, Isle of Man, she felt that the Lord called her to give public testimony, and being convinced from that time that she was anointed for such service, she went forth to declare the Gospel, either in mission hall or the open air. In various parts of England this was done, and God abundantly honoured the testimony of his servant. She aided her husband in the building and maintenance of five mission halls in St. Neot's and the neighbouring villages. For over thirty years they have both fearlessly warned sinners and sought to instruct saints, not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God.

Caring for the Blind.—The Deptford and District Society for the welfare of the Blind aims at cultivating the minds and intellects of the afflicted, as well as providing for their spiritual and social improvement. Meetings are held from time to time, and scripture readings, etc., have been the means of bringing many into the light of the Gospel. The Word of God has been listened to with deep reverence, and has been received into many hearts. Musical evenings, tea meetings, and excursions, tend to brighten these otherwise dull and monotonous lives. Reading and writing in the Braille and Moon systems are taught, and knowledge of various important subjects is imparted by means of entertaining and instructive lectures. The women learn knitting, crochet, and needlework, and other subjects will be added when funds will permit. The hon. secretary, Miss Cock, should be addressed 17, Tressillian Road, St. John's, Deptford.

School for Bible Study.

CONTINUING his series of addresses at Exeter Hall, Rev. HUBERT BROOKE spoke on the 7th inst. on the Book of Numbers. He dealt with the subject under the following heads:—

Introduction. 1. The title is from the Greek Version, referring to chaps. i.-iii., xxvi. In Hebrew is, "In the wilderness;" and the whole book concerns the wanderings and sojournings of God's people in the wilderness. 2. Is referred to by our Lord (John iii. 14; Rev. ii. 14); and in the Apostolic writings (1 Cor. x. 5-10; Heb. iii. 2, 5, &c.; vii. 5, &c.; ix. 4, 10-13; 2 Pet. ii. 15, 16; Jude 5, 11). 3. Covers a space of nearly thirty-nine years (i. 1; xxxiii. 38; xxxvi. 13).

Divisions. 1. Into four main parts: (a) At Sinai (i.-x. 10); (b) Sinai to Kadesh (x. 11-xiv. 45); (c) Kadesh to the Plains of Moab (xv. 1-xxi. 35); (d) In the Plains of Moab (xxii.-xxxvi.). The time occupied being, in (a) fifty days; (b) three months; (c) thirty-eight years; (d) perhaps three months. 2. Subdivisions: (a) Numbering and ordering (i.-iv.); cleansing and dedication (v., vi.); offerings (vii.); Levites (viii.); Passover and guidance (ix.-x. 10). (b) Incidents of the journey (x. 11-xii.); the spies (xiii.); the rebellion and provocation (xiv.). (c) Laws (xv., xviii., xix.); incidents (xvi., xvii., xx., xxi.). (d) Balaam (xxii.-xxv.); second numbering, (xxvi.); orders, laws, preparation for the land (xxvii.-xxxvi.).

Principles. 1. Order, rule and service provided for every one among God's people (Mark xiii. 34; 1 Peter iv. 10). 2. Guidance, provision, instruction prepared of God for the whole course of pilgrimage (Phil. iv. 19). 3. For man's failures, pardon and restoration are provided; direction and encouragment for their avoidance given (1 Cor. x. 13). 4. The order of the books is significant: conscious redemption, assured nearness to God and holiness—matters of inward blessing precede the outward principles of rule, order and service.

Personal Use. 1. Is directly taught by declaring the history to be typical and admonitory for us (1 Cor. x. 5-11). 2. A higher stage of experience was prepared for Israel, eighteen months after leaving Egypt (cp. Heb. iv. 1, 11). 3. The same Lord who is Redeemer is also Guide and Captain and Conqueror for his people (Isa. xxxiii. 22). To prove Him thus is to bring glory to his Name.

Irish Notes.

THE Cork branch of the Jews' Society have resolved to give £400 to erect an out-patients' department in connection with the hospital at Safed.

A Missionary Conference, under the auspices of the Derry Presbytery, has been held in Great James Street Presbyterian Church, Londonderry, under the presidency of Rev. Professor Henry. Rev. Mr. Shillidy, of India, and several others, took part in the proceedings, which were very interesting and helpful.

At a conference held in the offices of the Irish Temperance League, Belfast, last Friday evening, Dean Seaver presiding, it was resolved to found a home for female inebriates in Ireland. For the present the question of founding a similar home for men was postponed. The attendance was a very representative one.

The theological students of the Methodist College have of late been showing great enterprise and zeal. They have been conducting open-air meetings in the evenings, and on Saturdays and Sundays at the street corners, and also evangelistic meetings in halls and churches. The result is that their services are in much demand among the neighbouring congregations, and requests for help are pouring in upon them from different quarters. They took a new departure last week, and under the auspices of the Students' Missionary Union they held a Missionary Convention in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast. The speakers were all students, and there was an excellent attendance. The Convention may possibly be an annual fixture.

CHRIST'S COMING FORETOLD.—Is. ix. 2 7.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke ii. 11.

INTRODUCTORY.

WE closed last Sunday's lesson with a blessed promise of the coming of the Messiah and his forerunner. (Recall Mal. iii. 2-6). At Christmas time we are celebrating the anniversary of the great event which was then prophesied. The Jews in those times had to look forward with hope; we have to look backward with praise. The poor Jews were in great trouble and despair; they had only this promise to brighten their darkness. We live in the light and glory of its fulfilment, and all who will accept the Saviour, and, confessing their sins, receive from Him pardon and power, have still brighter hopes for the future. It is this that should make Christmas a time of real rejoicing.

ISAIAH.

Our lesson to-day takes us back in the history of the Jews about 300 years. The story of the times and circumstances under which Isaiah delivered his prophecy is found in 2 Kings xv. 23; xvii. 20; 2 Chron. xxviii. 16-25. Ahaz was a most wicked king, and God permitted the neighbouring nations to join together against him; then he asked the King of Assyria to come and help him. He came; but instead of helping, he despoiled and destroyed. God sent Isaiah to testify against all the wickedness, for true religion was almost destroyed. Isaiah vii. is the message to Ahaz; chap. viii. to x. 4, the message to the people, with the glorious promise of the Deliverer for the few who were still true to Jehovah. The enemies had determined to make a full end of the house of David, and place upon his throne a Syrian. But God's promises and plans cannot be overthrown by wicked men. (Read Isa. vii. 14-16.)

ISAIAH ix. 2-7.

Verse 2. The people of Judah were at this time walking in the darkness of sin and trouble. To them came the light of God's promise. The moral condition of the world was awful when Jesus Christ came into it as its Light. The state of a heart without Christ is utter darkness. (Illustrate from the heathen and their sad condition.) We are quite sure that these verses point to the Saviour, because they are quoted in Matt. iv. 15, 16.

Verses 3-5. The future scene passes before the mind of the Prophet—the happy time when battles would cease, when weapons of war would be laid aside, when the yoke of bondage would be broken. The coming of the Messiah is so clear and true to him that he describes it as if it had really happened.

Verse 6. Immanuel, "God with us," is the only Saviour, the only One who can bring "Peace on earth" (Micah v. 5; Eph. ii. 14). He is to be the King (1 Cor. xv. 25). A glorious future is still in store when Jesus is King over all. Each one who is converted brings this good time nearer.

Verse 7. Jesus sits on the throne (see Heb. i. 2, 3, 8, 13), and his kingdom is increasing and will increase for ever. There are dreadful evils in this world; drunkenness, idolatry, etc.; but all will be conquered by the Prince of Peace, and He will rule with justice and love. We often feel distressed because the power of evil is so strong. But Jehovah, who commands the hosts of heaven, says HE WILL DO IT.

THE SAVIOUR'S NAMES.

There are more than 100 names given in the Bible for our Saviour; they describe his character. (Get the scholars to tell some of them, and what they teach about Him.) We have four names in verse 6, which show us what a perfect Saviour He is. The very Saviour we each need.

WONDERFUL COUNSELLOR. (See R.V. marg.) Everything was wonderful about Jesus. His birth, life, death, resurrection, ascension; but, above all, He is a Wonderful Counsellor, sharing in God's counsels, teaching them to us; counselling by his Spirit. (John xiv. 23; xvi. 13; 1 Cor. ii. x.)

MIGHTY GOD. Perfect man, yet one with God Almighty.

EVERLASTING FATHER. Jesus said, "I and my Father are One." If we are afraid of a Mighty God, we are not of a loving Father.

PRINCE OF PEACE. He came to make peace, to give peace. He can say "Peace, be still," to all troubled hearts. Is this Saviour my Saviour? The question for each.

About Books.

BOSTON OF ETTRICK.

THE story of Boston of Ettrick has a charm all its own. Many have read the memoirs to great spiritual profit, and others will do so in days yet to come. It is a pleasure to welcome an edition so prepared as to assist the reader to follow the story intelligently. The title is familiar, Memoirs of the Life, Times, and Writings of the Reverend and Learned Thomas Boston, A.M. What is special is found in the introduction and notes furnished by Rev. George H. Morrison, M.A., of Dundee, together with excellent illustrations and map of Ettrick, also facsimile of Boston's writing, and of the personal covenant of his wife. In the words of Dr. Alexander Whyte, in a recommendatory note, this is a "scholarly and artistic edition" of Boston's autobiography. Mr. Morrison's notes are very useful for the light they throw upon the memoirs. Those who would know the heart of a man who lived a life of faith and prayer should read this book. To Scotch people who know the story, it is sufficient to say that this is in every way an excellent edition. (7s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

A MISSIONARY CALENDAR.

Mrs. Frances S. Hallowes has designed and compiled a very useful Missionary Calendar; A Record of the Pioneers of the Nineteenth Century. It is printed on art paper, for hanging in the study or classroom. Each page represents the almanack for the month, and associates with each day some event drawn from missionary history during the present century. The pages are surrounded by original designs, including seventy-two portraits of missionaries of various denominations, and twelve views from different parts of the world. Assuredly the Calendar is unique in missionary literature. It represents the chief Protestant Societies, English, Scotch, American, French, Dutch, German, Swedish, etc., and deals with the chief countries of both hemispheres. It is calculated to prove of service, historically, spiritually, and educationally. Members of missionary auxiliaries will be particularly gratified to possess this helpful publication. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Young People's Treasury and Little Gleaner is a bright little monthly. In homes where a measure of doctrinal instruction is given in early years, this will prove of special service. (1s. 6d. Houlston & Sons.)

Early Days for 1899 will be as pleasing to the young as its many predecessors. In variety of contents and general excellence this magazine ranks with the best that compete for the patronage of the young. (2s. C. H. Kelly.)

We welcome the twentieth volume of Our Own Magazine, edited by T. B. Bishop. The stories are all written with a good purpose; therefore we are glad that, both as a monthly and an annual, the pages are eagerly scanned in so many thousands of homes in our own land and beyond. The notes on the Scripture Union portions are always good and to the point. (2s. Children's Special Service Mission.)

The monthly magazines issued by the Stirling Tract Depôt are more attractive than ever; and the annual volumes will be substantial additions to parochial and such-like lending libraries. The British Messenger (1s. 6d.) comes first, with its running story and striking readings, long and short. Then there is The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) in large type, but with the same evangelistic purpose. Good News (4d.) is smaller in size, and not so obviously prepared for aged readers. All three publications are admirably illustrated.

STORY BOOKS.

Reaping the Harvest, by Ethel Philpot Crowther, is a simple but very touching story of duty and its reward. One of the characters is a victim to the curse of drink, but by the grace of God is enabled to reform. A love story runs through the book. (1s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt.)

In Blind Loyalty, a story for school girls, by E. L. Haverfield, the heroine is in many respects a girl of fine character, and her devoted loyalty to a friend, a girl quite unworthy of her confidence, gives the book its title. It is a sequel to "Our Vow," and is well illustrated. (2s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.)

The Heir of Hascombe Hall, a tale of the days of the Early Tudors. By E. Everett-Green. A favourite writer is here upon familiar ground. The result is a stirring story, in which prior and prince are brought into conflict, and other indications afforded of the grasping and tyranny of "Holy Church" in conditions where her claims are encouraged, her arrogance allowed. A Daughter of France, a story of Acadia, by Eliza F. Pollard. We are taken back to the early seventeenth century, before the Scotch settlement of Nova Scotia. The Huguenots and their sufferings are delineated in a forcible manner. A Vanished Nation, by Herbert Hayens, describes Paraguayan adventures some thirty-five years ago. The book is written in the best style of a favourite boys' author. (5s. each. Nelsons.)

Among the brightly got-up story books issued by Blackie & Son are:—Mignonne; or Miss Patricia's Pet, by Jennie Chappell (2s.) This is a tale of many troubles. The issue was happy, and the book will be read by our girls, young and old. A Loyal Little Maid, by Sarah Tytler (2s. 6d.), is a story of Mar's rebellion. This volume will specially interest readers of Scottish history. By nobility of character and devotion to her family, the central figure may well occupy an exemplary position. A Queen among Girls, by E. Davenport Adams (3s. 6d.), is a story which will recall to many the pleasant days of school-life. The graphic delineation of character gives a distinct charm to the book. Young people will find much that is well worth emulating in the conduct of the principal figures. G. A. Henty's No Surrender! is a thrilling tale of the rising in La Vendée. (5s.) We are taken back over 100 years, and to an episode second to none in the annals of heroism. The horrors of war are depicted with great power; and deeds of daring light up what is otherwise a very dark chapter of history.

From J. F. Shaw & Co.

A Girl Among Girls, by E. A. Gillie, is a very readable story of an English teacher's experiences at a school in Germany. While bright and incisive, it is marked by care and restraint; and is, indeed, one of the best girl's books of the season. M. S. Comrie's Her Next Door Neighbour, a picture of every-day life in a girls' boarding school, contains much that is spiritually helpful. (3s. 6d. each)

Evelyn Everett Green's stories are consistently marked by deftness of construction and grace of style. Odeyne's Marriage is, on the whole, worthy of the author's reputation, but one would scarcely expect so spiritual a lady as Odeyne, brought up in a rectory under the influence of a saintly father, to accept a mere good-natured Pagan like Desmond St. Claire for her husband. However, in the end she reclaims him. Winning the Golden Spurs, by M. H. Miller, is a highly sensational tale of the fourteenth century, and is full of exciting incident. Brenda's vivid sketches of life in the back streets and dismal alleys of our great cities are notable for their freshness and pathos. Her latest production is the vivid Wonderful Mates, which may be described as "A Story of the Church and the Slums." Some will think that the bright little hero might well have been endued with a higher ideal than to go soldiering. Dr. Gordon Stables wields an industrious pen. His latest gift to our youth is Old England on the Sea: the story of Admiral Drake. Here we trace the making of the man and his various deeds of daring, leading up to the contest with "the Invincible Armada," followed by his death. It were unnecessary to characterize Dr. Gordon Stables's famous stories. This is assuredly as good as the best of them. (5s. each).

Mr. C. J. Thynne has issued a sixpenny cloth-bound edition of Charles M. Sheldon's book In His Steps—What Would Jesus Do? The book is famous; this edition is "a marvel of cheapness."

Love, Courtship, and Marriage, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. (2s. nett. Partridge), is a very attractive little book. The counsels are unexceptionable, and the chaste exterior befits the choice contents. For presentation purposes, this is a book to be strongly recommended.

Nature Notes, the magazine of the Selborne Society, is a singularly interesting monthly visitor. It introduces wholesome elements of thought and culture into many a home circle. The December issue completes the tenth volume. (2d. monthly. Elliot Stock.)

The Christmas extra of the Boy's Own Paper is interesting and instructive. The illustrations are above the average. The corresponding number of the "Girl's Own" is entitled The Glory of the Snow. It is a budget of wholesome reading for the holiday season. (6d. each. R.T.S.)

A valuable paper by the late Rev. C. D. Marston, entitled The Position of the Laity in the Church, has been reissued by Mr. Thynne (6d.) The arguments employed against sacerdotalism a generation ago are still good, and sadly need repetition. The author's son, Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Belgrave Chapel, S.W., writes a useful introduction to the pamphlet.

Mrs. F. S. Hallowes has issued, in a small volume, the "Thoughts for Parents" which she contributed to our pages a few months ago. The book is entitled The Rights of Children—in Spirit, Mind, and Body. Fathers as well as mothers are addressed in these pages, which also have a message for all who would guide the young into the ways of wisdom and peace. (Partridge.)

Messrs. Marshall Bros. have issued cheap editions of two excellent biographies—Pilkington of Uganda, by Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby; and John MacNeil, late evangelist in Australia, a memoir by his wife, edited by Rev. H. B. Macartney (3s. 6d. each). Both have portraits; the former maps as well, the latter other illustrations. As lives of spiritually-minded men and praiseworthy workers, these books deserve many readers.

Among the recent issues from The Leadenhall Press an interesting place is filled by the illustrated shilling series of "Forgotten Children's Books." In the matter of type and engravings, also of size and binding, no less than of curious contents, these quaint little books take us back a hundred years, more or less. The first three of these reproductions are:—The Daisy; or, "Cautionary Stories in Verse, adapted to Ideas of Children from Four to Eight Years Old" (1807); The Cowslip; or, "More Cautionary Stories in Verse," by the same author (1811); and New Riddle-Book, by John-the-Giant-Killer, Esquire (1778).

As the festive season comes round, we always look for poetic messages from Mrs. Gorges. Her verse is at once spiritual and experimental; it presents Divine promises and counsels, in combination with heart needs and aspirations. Mr. Caswall, of Birmingham, has just brought out some singularly chaste booklets as channels of Mary Gorges' choice poems. Among these are "Think it not Strange" (1 Pet. iv. 12), and "Strangers and Pilgrims." Stimulating thoughts for the New Year are enshrined in: "My Presence shall go with Thee," and "A Word of Cheer." Booklets in ornamental covers are: "Casting all your Care upon Him," "Cords of Lovingkindness," and "A Border-land of Time." All are admirably suited for friendly greetings among Christians.

There is nothing left to be said about Spurgeon's Sermons. It is gratifying, however, to note that there are still hundreds of discourses from the lips of the great preacher in course of preparation for periodical publication. Many have learned with satisfaction that, for those who cannot command a complete set of the sermons, selections are being issued, consisting of discourses on particular topics or doctrines. The latest book in this class is Christ in the Old Testament, a volume of over 700 large pages, containing discourses (sixty in number) on the foreshadowings of our Lord in Old Testament History, Ceremony, and Prophecy. (7s. Passmore & Alabaster.) To read these pages carefully and prayerfully is to sit at the feet of a great teacher, and to receive through a gracious channel the teachings of Him who is the end and substance of the Old Testament, and the embodiment and glory of the New.

Those who have been following recent Ritualistic developments will peruse with sad concern a volume presenting a second series of articles from The Record, under the title of Romanism in the English Church. We have here a collection of sketches, from the pens of eye-witnesses, descriptive of illegal services in city town, and village churches. As a companion volume to "The Roman Mass in the English Church," this is a book to open the eyes. Men may well ask why our martyrs went to the stake, and whether the Reformation was more than a nominal point of departure. Those who are not yet convinced as to the dangerous prevalence of Romanism in the national church, should be convinced by reading these striking pages. It is hoped the volume will do something to advance measures which should properly result from such a conviction widely entertained (1s. nett. C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen Street, W.C.)

Part VII. of THE PHOTO-MINIATURE is devoted to platinotype processes. The entire series will be of great value to photographers. (6d. Dawbarn & Ward.)

A record which will have peculiar interest for some readers is AN ILLUSTRATED, HISTORICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE ACCOUNT OF HOVE CHURCH, SUSSEX, by John James Newport. Revised and enlarged edition, 3d. post free from The Author, Caritas Villa, Hove.

THE EXPOSITOR for next next year promises articles on Lines of Defence of the Biblical Revelation, by Professor D. S. Margoliouth; and the Doctrines of Grace, by Rev. John Watson, D.D.; also A Historical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians, by Professor W. M. Ramsay.

Mr. Silas Henn has considerably enlarged his pamphlet on DIVINE HEALING; or, JESUS THE GREAT HEALER OF DISEASES. (5d. post free. The Author, Himley Road, Dudley, Worc.) Disease is regarded as the result of sin, and deliverance therefrom is seen to be included among the blessings of Christ's redemption.

PATON'S LIST OF SCHOOLS AND TUTORS has made its second annual appearance. The contents are well classified, and there are many illustrations. A feature of special value is the list of scholarships and exhibitions obtainable at the public schools for boys and girls. (1s. J. & J. Paton, 143, Cannon Street, E.C.)

A booklet which will prove interesting to many at the present time is THE SHORTER CATECHISM OF 1647 and THE FREE CHURCH CATECHISM OF 1898; a sketch and an appreciation, by D. Douglas Bannerman, M.A., D.D., (Oliphant Anderson & Ferrier). The pages are instructive in matters historical and theological.

FOREIGN MISSIONS: ARE THEY DOING GOOD? (Belford & Co., Broughty Ferry. 2d.), is a sermon by Rev. G. E. Troup, M.A., the second edition of which is now published. It is an earnest plea for missionary work, convincing in its argument. The proceeds of sale are given to the Livingstonia Mission Lake Nyassa.

Missionary Exhibition.

SINCE the celebration of the centenary of the C.M.S. in April last, loan exhibitions have been held in several parts of the country, having for their object the illustration of the Society's work in its various spheres of labour. One of these exhibitions has recently been held in the Conference Hall, Stratford—December 6-12 (Sunday excepted).

The Exhibition was formally opened each day by one of the many influential friends of the C.M.S. Among others may be named the Bishop of St. Albans, the Bishop of Stepney, Sir J. H. Kennaway, and Sir T. Fowell Buxton. It is believed that it has proved successful in at least one respect—that of stimulating interest in the great work of evangelizing the world.

The exhibition was arranged in a series of courts, each of which represented a portion of the foreign mission field. Thousands of articles, made and used by native races and tribes of every quarter of the globe, were displayed. "Things seen are mightier than things heard," especially in an exhibition of this character. No amount of talking could adequately describe some of the objects on view. The countries represented were—Africa, America (North and South), India, Palestine, Japan and China, and Australasia. The collection was a medley mass of images, implements of war, toys, articles of furniture.

Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming's contribution to the exhibition was special, in that she showed her valuable collection of paintings of scenes in China, and photographs of blind students, organists and printers. Another department of special interest was the Zenana Court. This was a model of the women's compartment in an Indian house of the higher class, and from it one could get some idea of the secluded life of India's women. Some lady missionaries of the C.E.Z.M.S. gave short addresses at intervals during the exhibition.

Articles manufactured by native Christians were to be found in the exhibition, such as mats made by Indian Christians in connection with the Industrial Missions Aid Society. The general body of exhibitors also included Mr. E. N. Buxton, Captain Cundy, Mr. Eliot Howard, Dr. Harford-Battersby, the Dowager Lady Buxton, and Archdeacon Stevens.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Leeds Y.M.C.A. has taken under its wing the City Lodging-house Mission, which is now in a flourishing condition. During the year some 360 services have been held on Sundays and week days, with an aggregate attendance of upwards of 6,000 persons.

An Anglo-Saxon section has been formed within the Brussels Y.M.C.A., which already had sections for French, German, and Dutch young men resident in the city.

The secretary of Pietermaritzburg Y.M.C.A., Mr. T. C. C. Sloane, writes appealing for literature of a religious character for distribution amongst British soldiers. Mr. Sloane has been granted a pass through the camp hospital, and in course of visitation found that illustrated tracts were readily received. Parcels should be addressed care of Sir Walter Peace, K.C.M.G., Agent-General of Natal, Victoria Street, London, S.W., or care of Hon. Henry Bale, Q.C., M.L.A., Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa.

In his quarterly letter to the Scottish National Council, their representative at Lahore, Mr. J. H. Oldham, gives an interesting account of a Punjab Students' Conference, which he convened at Beas, in a bungalow placed at his disposal by the Church Missionary Society. "At the opening meeting," Mr. Oldham writes, "the object of the Conference was summed up as the raising up of a 'Student Movement in and of India.'" An important and immediate outcome of the Conference was the formation of a Punjab District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s.

Mr. Oldham further says:—"Mr. M'Conaughy stirred us up very much by his account of the work at Madras, where they have now over 600 members, and yet the one object of the Y.M.C.A. is constantly kept in view—the winning of the men for Christ. Their magnificent new building is so constructed that no man can enter it—whether he is going to the reading-room, or educational classes, or restaurant—without passing a certain central spot where the secretary or some of his staff are on duty to give him a word of welcome, and try to get to know him and lead him to Christ."

Church of England.

The Archbishop of Ontario (Dr. Travers Lewis) has intimated his intention to resign the See in March next. He was consecrated in 1862.

The first donation of £1,000, to meet an offer to give £1,000 to the Egyptian Bishopric Fund if nineteen others would do the same, has been received. The original promise holds good till the end of the year.

The builders are now engaged upon the second block of the permanent buildings of the Church House, in accordance with the plans revised by the late Sir Arthur Blomfield. It is estimated that the cost will be £20,000, towards which about £11,000 has been contributed or promised.

The resignation is announced of Canon Jacob as vicar of Horningsham, after forty-one years of faithful ministrations and devoted work. Canon Jacob was appointed to the living in 1858, and during his many years' labour has won great esteem and regard among his parishioners.

The General Committee of the Liverpool Diocesan Board of Education and School Society have adopted the following resolution:—"That no grant be given from the Diocesan Board of Education to any school belonging to any church the incumbent of which refuses obedience to the Bishop in the lawful exercise of his episcopal authority."

The Church of St. Michael's Bassishaw, in the City of London, was recently put up for sale. The church, the interior of which has been dismantled for some time past, is about to be demolished under the Union of Benefices Act. There were very few persons present at the sale, which was conducted inside the church. The building was put up in twenty-three lots, and the whole amount of bids accepted just exceeded £200.

The first meeting in furtherance of the scheme for the creation of the diocese of Southwark (by the inclusion in it of the whole of the county of London south of the Thames, together with the archdeaconry of Kingston-upon-Thames) was recently held under the presidency of the Bishop of Rochester. The meeting was largely and influentially attended. Although a general appeal has not yet been issued, the Bishop was able to announce donations to the amount of £23,500.

On a recent Sunday Rev. James Battersby, vicar of St. James's, Sheffield, referred in his discourse, with much feeling, to the fact that on that day he completed fifty years of service in the ministry of the Church of England, of which forty-three years had been spent in two Sheffield parishes. It is a pathetic circumstance that, on the Tuesday following, Mr. Battersby, who had been in failing health for some time, was suddenly stricken with serious illness. On Saturday he passed away.

Bishop Ridley, of Caledonia, preaching at Manchester, dealt with various aspects of missionary work. In his own vast diocese he had seen fine native tribes wiped out entirely by drink and impurity, and the efforts of missionaries to raise the standard of native life was checked and hindered very often by the lives which Englishmen themselves lived, and by the sale of drink, which yielded a profit that could only be called blood money. Yet, in spite of great difficulties, solid progress was being made.

Bishop Barry, preaching recently at Manchester on "Christianity and Mohammedanism," said they might learn two or three lessons from Islam in missionary practice. The first was simplicity. How often missions failed through trying to plant the whole tree instead of sowing the seed! The next was the lesson of the value of law and discipline, especially in dealing with simple and half-barbaric races. Lastly, there was the lesson of universality in missionary energy. What they wanted everywhere, and especially in missionary work, was recognition of the fact that on every member of Christ, without exception, was laid the duty of helping, by his life and by his labour, to extend the kingdom of God.

Congregational.

Yorkshire has taken the lead in adopting the Twentieth Century Fund, as no fewer than 132 churches in the county have communicated with the officials of the fund. In Lancashire the number is 122, in London 10, in Gloucester and Hereford 39, in Warwickshire 30.

A friend of the London Missionary Society has given a freehold house in Manchester, to be used as a home for missionaries of the Society during their time of furlough. At a meeting of the Executive Committee arrangements were made for the furnishing of the house, for its being vested in trustees, and for its supervision on completion by a committee of ladies.

Dr. G. S. Barrett, preaching at Norwich, said that in these days the value of women's work on public bodies and in school affairs was fully conceded; and why should they be excluded from the official work of the Church? In the primitive Church, down to the middle of the second century, women had an official position. He hoped the new century would see a new departure in women's work for the Church.

Baptist.

Revs. Dr. Clifford and J. H. Shakespeare have conducted a number of enthusiastic gatherings, in furtherance of the Twentieth Century Fund, at Norwich and Ipswich.

At a meeting of the National Free Church Council, held in the Central Hall, Manchester, Rev. Dr. Mackennal presiding, it was decided, on the motion of Dr. Townsend, seconded by Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, to nominate Rev. J. G. Greenhough for the post of president for 1901.

At Beulah Chapel, Thornton Heath, an effort is being made to erect a much-needed new building in front of the present school-chapel, which is now too small to meet the increasing demands. The school-chapel was founded by the late C. H. Spurgeon, who took a deep interest in the work. The address of the pastor, Rev. T. Lardnor, is 85, The Chase, Clapham, S.W.

About five years ago a friend at Deganwy, North Wales, bought a wooden photographic studio, fitted it up as a chapel, and Welsh services have since been regularly held in it. The number of English residents in Deganwy has increased; the town has rapidly risen as a seaside resort, and as no English chapel exists, many friends have to walk long distances to attend divine services. In order to meet this need, the members of the Welsh Church started English services in their chapel during the past summer, with gratifying results. The present chapel is, however, dilapidated, and totally unsuitable for public worship. It has become necessary to at once erect a new structure. A site has been secured, but £1,500 is needed in order to open the buildings free of debt. The pastor is Rev. C. A. Jeffery, 13, Marine Crescent, Deganwy, North Wales.

Methodist.

Among the signatures to the historic roll of the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund is that of Mrs. Margaret Annie Neave who is 107 years of age.

Two additional Wesleyan Methodist Chaplains have been appointed by the War Office to serve with the troops in South Africa—Revs. T. H. Wainman, of Johannesburg, and W. C. Burgess, of the Orange Free State.

A united mission has been held in Leeds under the auspices of Leeds Primitive Methodist Council. Ministers conducted services in various churches throughout the city, and Rev. J. Pickett preached each day at noon to a united gathering in the Philosophical Hall.

Presbyterian.

The debate in the Free Presbytery of Inverness on the question of union between the Free and U.P. Churches is an indication of the change which is taking place in the Highlands. For the first time in its history the Inverness Presbytery voted for union.

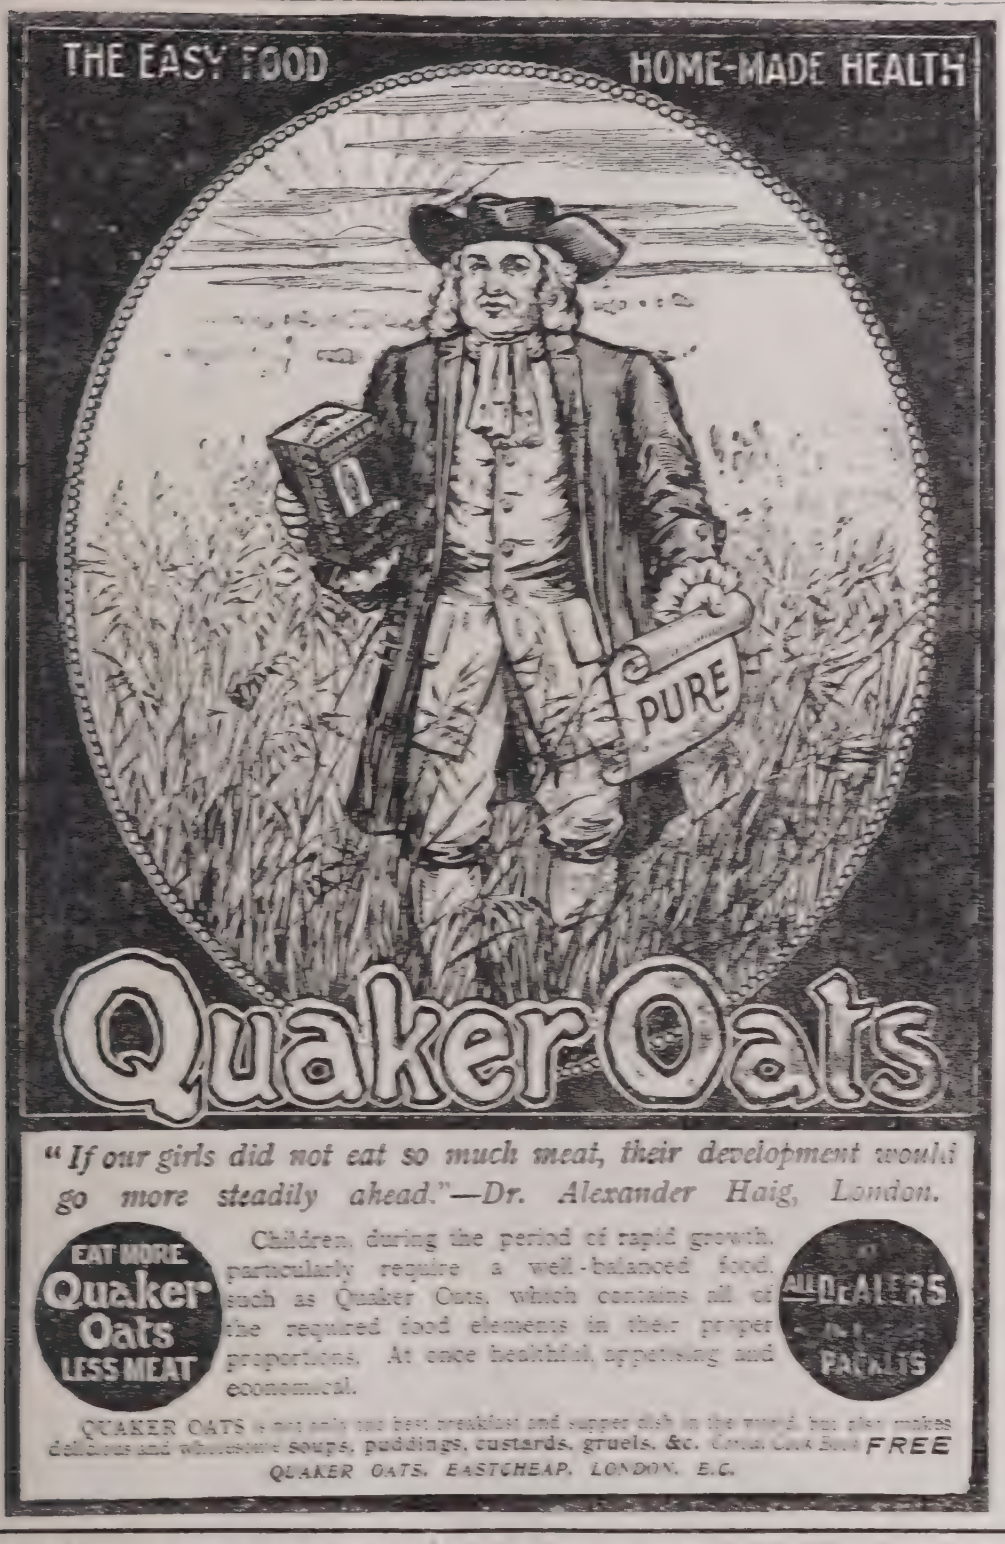
In the course of a recent address, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said that, in the United States, Protestants, who largely predominated, were more Protestant than in this country, for they were thoroughly evangelical, and there was very little of the High Church doctrine or sacerdotalism. The religious life of America also developed itself more on the social side than in any other part of the world, and a brotherly feeling existed in many places of worship which our stiff, reticent habits rendered impossible.

Society of Friends.

Dublin Friends have been favoured by a visit from William C. Braithwaite, on his way home from the South of Ireland. He kindly gave them a very interesting lecture, entitled "Studies in the Life and Writings of the Apostle Paul," which was highly appreciated.

Luton and Leighton Monthly Meeting is to deposit on loan at Devonshire House twenty-four volumes of old Monthly Meeting minutes, &c. Some are of exceptional interest, in the handwriting of Thomas Elwood, and containing records of the Penns, Peningtons, and other Friends of that time. They will be available for reference.

The feeling of sympathy with Friends in Australia which rested on the Yearly Meeting of late years has led Priscilla H. Peckover and other Friends to establish a trust fund of £5,000. The primary use of this income is to assist in the travelling expenses of children to Hobart Friends' School; secondly, for other purposes in development of that school; thirdly, in other ways to promote the work of Friends in Australasia. The Meeting for Sufferings has consented to take the oversight of the trust.



Fallen Asleep.

Mr. BENJAMIN ARMITAGE, of Chomlea, Pendleton, a liberal supporter of the Congregational churches of Manchester and Salford.—The death has occurred of Rev. G. MOCKFORD, who had for forty years been pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church, Heathfield.—The Congregationalists of Denbighshire have lost one of their leading deacons through the death of Mr. JONATHAN JARVIS, of Rhos.—Walsall Methodism has lost a generous supporter by the death of Mr. EDWARD MARSH at the age of eighty-five.—Dr. JACKSON, one of the oldest deacons of the Congregational Church, Whitehaven, and treasurer of its P.S.A.—At Blackpool, on December 8, Rev. JAS. WAYMAN. He had ministered at Blackpool, and subsequently in London and at Matlock, and had been chairman of Lancs. Congregational Union.—At Tarbert, co. Kerry, Mr. THOS. GEORGE HILL, an earnest Christian worker, aged eighty-nine years; at Blacklion, co. Leitrim, Mr. JNO. NIXON, a devoted Sunday school superintendent, aged fifty-eight

The Gospel in Saxony.

A MEETING was held last week by kind invitation and under the presidency of Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant, at 1, Wyndham Place, Bryanston Square, W., to confer on a proposal to arrange for a two years' evangelistic work in Saxony, and other parts of Germany, and also in Austria. Two brethren well known and long tried in Gospel effort have offered themselves for such service, and many open doors present themselves. Recent conferences and drawing-room meetings in various parts have shown a widespread desire for Bible exposition and plain Gospel teaching, so that it is felt by some to whom the facts are known that a movement such as that proposed would result in much blessing. The plans of action would be wholly undenominational, and in no way antagonistic to any church, the one purpose being the preaching of the Word and the winning of souls for Christ. Among those attending the meeting were Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Messrs. W. H. Seagram, C. Boardman, H. S. Ridings, and R. C. Morgan, letters from others sympathizing with the plan being read. To ensure the adoption of a two years' campaign, a guarantee fund of not less than £400 per annum must be secured; £150 of this is already forthcoming, and prayerful hope is cherished that readers of this announcement will be led to lend their aid. Of the need and value of such a campaign there can be no doubt. Communications on the matter will be gladly responded to by Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant, at the above address.

The Open-air Mission. — In view of the widening influence of this Mission, and of the results of its abundant labours all over the country, an effort has this year been made to raise the income to the sum of £3,000—an amount all too small for the great work in hand. Up to the present £2,200 has been received from all sources, and an earnest appeal is made for help from friends who have so sympathetically rendered aid in the past. Mr. Frank Cockrem, the secretary, may be addressed: Open-air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Personalia.

Rev. M. Nachim, of the British Jews' Society, is completing his forty years of service in the Jewish mission field. He is still in the enjoyment of health and vigour.

Mr. J. J. Sims, 13, Glengyle Crescent, Edinburgh, whose missions have been from time to time mentioned in these columns, is prepared to receive invitations to hold some missions in England.

Ven. Archdeacon Phair, who is chairman of the committee of the Dynevor Indian Hospital, Manitoba (of which some account was given in our last), is now in England, and may be addressed Sparkbrook Vicarage, Birmingham.

Miss Catherine E. Radcliffe, of Liverpool, has been staying in Paris, where she addressed a gathering of young people at Washington House, 18, Rue de Milan, on Sunday afternoon. Miss Radcliffe may possibly take up work in Berlin shortly.

Pastor Jeanmairet is at present in this country in the interests of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society's Basuto Mission. At a meeting held at Exeter Hall on the 7th inst., Rev. Dr. G. D. Matthews described the needs of Basutoland, and the work that has been done. Pastor Jeanmairet also gave an account of the Mission, illustrated by limelight views.

Rev. C. H. Marsack Day has been welcomed to the pastorate of Avenue Road Church, Shepherd's Bush. Revs. C. B. Sawday, Frank White, and W. Fuller Gooch, with Mr. W. R. Lane and Mr. Neatby (the late pastor), took part in the public meeting, which was marked by warmth and spirituality. Pastor White recalled the days when the beloved Charles Graham was at Avenue Road, and trusted that there were times of much blessing in store for the Church.

Mr. H. E. Lester, J.P., in view of his leaving the neighbourhood, has resigned the leadership of the Young Men's Union, connected with the Baptist Church, Fillebrook, Leytonstone (Rev. John Bradford, pastor). In the course of farewell proceedings last week, reference was made to the extent to which the Divine blessing has rested upon the Bible class. Some of the former members are now pastors of churches in different parts of the country, while others are labouring in the neighbourhood and elsewhere. Mr. Charles Lester succeeds his uncle in the leadership.

Mr. Will Gordon Sprigg, general secretary of the Cape Town Young Men's Christian Association, left England for South Africa, on Saturday last, in the Tantallon Castle. During his stay in England, extending over several weeks, Mr. Sprigg sought to interest friends in the work of the Y.M.C.A. at Cape Town; and it was his joy to meet with much encouragement. As we explained in our issue of October 26, Mr. Sprigg has been specially engaged in collecting funds to enable the Association to extend its premises. The scheme adopted—in every way a very desirable one—will involve an outlay of £9,000, of which it was hoped about one-third would be given by the British public. What with the war and other matters, the present has proved an unsuitable time for pushing the appeal; but, nevertheless, Mr. Sprigg collected over £1,250. He returns without further delay, in order to give himself to the practical work at a time when personal attention is specially urgent.

German Artisans in London.—The artisans' branch of the German Y.M.C.A. carries on a useful Gospel work. The hall erected for meetings and Bible study is well attended, and the secretary visits the members in their workshops. It is hoped to close the year free of debt. Mr. W. Müller is the president. He may be addressed, Christian Home for German Artisans, 88-90, Leman Street, Aldgate, E.

The Hieromnemonic Choir is the name of an organization recently formed under the presidency of Rev. E. A. Stuart, vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater. Its object is to give opportunity for singers to use their voices in the definite service of Christ. The members are prepared to assist at missionary, temperance, and other meetings. A missionary lecture, entitled "Light in the Darkness," is to be given by Rev. E. A. Stuart, at St. Matthew's, Bayswater, on the 20th inst., when the choir will take part. The conductor is Mr. Livesey Carrott, and particulars may be obtained from Mr. W. H. Hitchcock, hon. sec., 100, Blenheim Crescent, W.

Barry Dock Mission.—Anniversary gatherings have been held recently in connection with the tent mission work carried on at Barry Dock, under the superintendence of Mr. Gerald Coultas. The attendances were large, and the proceedings enthusiastic. Mr. Donald McLean, of Cardiff, spoke encouraging words to the devoted band of workers, and Mr. Coultas gave a spirited and comprehensive review of the year's work. Meetings have been held at many places in South Wales, while the varied efforts of the thriving Barry Dock Mission itself have borne abundant fruit. As the result of public-house visitation many drunkards have been reclaimed. Mr. Coultas may be addressed at the Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales.

Evangelistic.

Shankill Road Mission, Belfast.

During the month of November, Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, conducted special services in the large Albert Hall within the above mission buildings. It has pleased God to bless the meetings from the very beginning. Numbers found their way to the inquiry room night after night, and were personally dealt with by the workers, Bible in hand.

Rev. H. Montgomery and Mr. Dunn also addressed meetings in the open air, and from this source some of the best fruit was gathered. The evangelist also spoke to dinner-hour gatherings in several of the public works, and his services were greatly appreciated. Mr. Dunn was clear, logical, and scriptural, and in his addresses there were wise and winning words for the sinner, and also strong meat for the believer. In addition to the Gospel meetings, a popular service on Saturday nights was instituted with limelight views. The attendance on these occasions numbered fully 2,000. The general attendance was well maintained all through the month. Mr. Dunn delivered a very interesting lecture on Palestine.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Another month's battling against the powers of darkness, both from the effects of weather and also the hardness of man's heart, against the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Nevertheless, much encouragement has been the result of a month's mission held by Mr. Thos. Richardson, of Rotherhithe, in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road. His connection for many years with the work, before being invited to the South-East, makes him a special favourite with the people, and his association with parochial work in the district in the past also makes him a well-known man. Consequently his visit yearly is sure to draw those who do not, under ordinary circumstances, attend the services of the hall. His preaching was much blessed. He has wonderful power of endurance, and few men are able to carry on such an enormous amount of work, after the ordinary business of every day in the City, as Mr. Richardson does.

It is questionable whether any other worker in the Lord's vineyards does so much as he does after business hours. He is a most fluent speaker, and ofttimes rises to a pitch of eloquence. The vigour with which he delivers his addresses is only excelled by the good, sound, telling matter that is always incorporated into them. After every service there were some who sought his advice about their souls' welfare, and many have been the good cases of men coming for the first time to hear him who have left the hall with hearts changed, and leaving behind the impression that they went forth to lead a new life in Christ Jesus.

Winter Work at Costers' Hall.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., founder and honorary superintendent of the work at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, calls attention to the urgent need which exists for Christian work in the overcrowded district of Hoxton and Shoreditch. A great deal is done in the way of supplying halfpenny dinners and free cocoa breakfasts to underfed children who attend the elementary schools. The continual immigration into the neighbourhood of the lowest classes, who have been turned out of their old rookeries in consequence of improvement schemes, has made some quarters more criminal. Those who remember Golden Lane as it was over thirty years ago testify that some of the slum thoroughfares are quite as bad as of yore, if not more dangerous. Costers' Hall, with its assembly rooms capable of accommodating 700 persons, is used for Sunday services, assistance being rendered by members of the Evangelization Society. There is a very large Sunday-school, limited only by the size of the building. It is believed that 100 young people have been converted during the last three months. Costers' Hall is a centre of spiritual and temporal blessing, influencing the lives of thousands of men, women, and children. Whilst the surrounding ritualistic churches are a failure—notwithstanding their loud invitation and popish ceremonies—these meetings are crowded with people drawn together by no exhibition religion, but simply the desire to worship God in spirit and in truth. Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E. Parcels of left-off clothing should be sent to Costers' Hall, Hoxton, N.

The fifteen-days' evangelistic services, recently conducted in the Railway Mission Hall, Lowestoft, by Mr. Samuel Levermore, of the Evangelization Society, proved a very blessed time. At almost every meeting some testified to receiving blessing. A number professed to find the Lord Jesus. W. M. C.

Mr. A. Booth, of Stockport, has conducted a fortnight's united mission at Alsager, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. A number of persons passed through the inquiry rooms.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, of the Evangelization Society, has completed a remarkable mission at Sheffield. Many professed to receive Christ, in one case a whole family. B. H. H.

A fifteen-days' mission has been held at Bredfield and Hasketon by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelization Society. The meetings were remarkably well attended by anxious hearers, and we trust the Gospel, which was faithfully preached, will result in much permanent good. W. R.

A ten-days' mission has been held at Richmond Terrace Wesleyan Church, Bradford, by Mr. Josiah Nix. It began with a workers' meeting. On the first Sunday afternoon many young people decided for Christ. Afterwards adults began to yield, and the Mission steadily grew in influence till it culminated during the last three days in times of great grace.

Mr. William Noble is holding a mission at Glastonbury. The meetings commenced on the 10th inst. The local ministers are evincing keen interest. On Sunday last the assembly-room was crowded. A united choir, representing all the churches, led the singing. There has been much earnest prayer and united effort. A conference has been convened with a view to constituting a permanent committee for continuing the work.

The good work commenced at the Peckham Tabernacle by the South London Christian Union has been continued during the past week at the Peckham Rye Mission, where six-days' revival services have been held. Rev. H. Mann (Free Methodist), Pastor F. Tolhurst, Mr. Ned Wright, and friends took part. The Holy Spirit was with us, and the preaching of the Word was with power, the result being that sinners were saved, backsliders restored, Christians built up, and Christ magnified.

W. Hardwick, Hon. Sec.

The quiet town of Abingdon-on-Thames has just been stirred by a united mission among the Free Churches—Baptist, Congregational, Primitive Methodist, and Wesleyan—conducted by Mr. F. Wycliffe Pascoe, of the Evangelization Society, and continuing for three weeks. Many profess to have accepted Christ, and many more have been aroused to deeper and more vigorous Christian life. Mr. Pascoe's quiet, yet telling, presentation of the Gospel, alike in Bible readings, evangelistic meetings, and children's services, secures for him an attentive and interested hearing. W. H. D.

Rev. A. Swift, of the East Dulwich Congregational Church, has just concluded a fortnight's mission at Littleborough under the auspices of the local Free Church Council. The services have been characterized by deep spiritual power, and have increased in numbers and zeal each day. Particular mention may be made of the afternoon conferences on spiritual life and work, which have been exceedingly helpful. The results of this mission will undoubtedly be a permanent quickening of the churches and a cementing of the union amongst them. On the last evening the missioner delivered an eloquent lecture on "Billy Bray, the King's Son." A further visit of Mr. Swift is looked forward to by all. G. Knowles Smith.

Orange Street Hall, Leicester Square, was crowded on Thursday last with theatrical women who had accepted Mr. William Forbes's invitation to tea. After tea, there were solos, hymns, and Gospel addresses. The Religious Tract Society sent for each guest a booklet, entitled "Sunbeams," and the Bible Flower Mission sent flowers with texts attached. As many of these young women are now leaving London for the provincial pantomimes, Mr. Forbes is very desirous if friends in the provinces will take an interest in these people and have meetings for them. He will be pleased to hear from friends. Address, 71, Tollington Road, N.

A series of services has been conducted by Mr. W. H. Jennings, a well-known Devonshire magistrate, in connection with the Wesleyan cause, at Annfield, Liverpool. On the two Sundays there were great congregations and many inquirers after salvation. On the Thursday afternoon, in response to an invitation of the missioner, hundreds of children from the Board Schools in the neighbourhood attended a young people's service, and scores of bright and bonny boys and girls came to the decision that they would become followers of Jesus. The last two nights the numbers increased, and much interest and enthusiasm were aroused as the people listened to the story of the evangelist's eventful life. The mission has been a great blessing to many.

In connection with the Hull Free Church Council, Gipsy Smith has just concluded a ten-days' mission. Although there were many things to tell against it, it proved a season of great blessing. On the first Sunday Great Thornton Street Wesleyan Chapel was full in the morning, while at night many had to be turned away. Night after night during the week the

IT is deeply to be regretted that so far no organized effort has been made to procure assistance for the millions in India who are face to face with famine. A body of missionaries, labouring in Gujerat, send us an urgent appeal. Parents, it is said, have killed themselves rather than see their little ones perishing; men have preferred quick and sudden death to slow starvation. Parents, naturally affectionate, are actually offering to sell their children for a few pounds of rice! The mere mention of these horrors will be sufficient to evoke Christian sympathy. We are in communication with missionaries in various parts of the affected region, and shall be only too glad to wire them help as it may be committed to our care.

The fund from which in years past we have been enabled, by the generosity of our readers, to contribute to the Christmas needs of many deserving missions and philanthropic organizations is entirely depleted. At the same time, the number of deserving applications for help is very numerous. Will friends remember this?

It is impossible to face the thought of Christmas this year without a sad sense of the contrast between the significance of the season and the actual facts. It is a time for family rejoicing and reunion, of love and goodwill to all mankind, of happy home-gatherings, of religious commemoration and thanksgiving. In the face of this, we are engaged in one of the most terrible wars of the century, and that with a civilized and Christian nation; there will be scores of thousands of absentees from the family circles, some dead, some wounded, others in hourly peril and want; and in countless homes, sorrow and longing will fill hearts that last year were full of happiness and hope. Apart from the private losses that are being mourned in homes belonging to every grade of society, the national outlook has been seriously darkened by the recent reverses from which we have suffered.

All this is a reason not for ignoring Christmas, or being embittered at the contrast between the season and the situation, but for a deeper grasp of its Divine message. There is often much shallowness and frivolity mingled with its sentiment; here is a call to a more serious mood. The sufferings and bereavements of our own homes, or those of our fellow-citizens, create a fresh demand for the sympathy and the helpfulness which are drawn forth by the mere name of Christmas. The fact that we are at war at this season of "peace and goodwill" should make us redouble our efforts to hasten the reign of the Prince of Peace. And in the hour of national sorrow for those who have been called to give their lives for their country, shall not our thoughts turn to Him who left his home on high that He might freely give Himself unto death for the redemption of the world?

The home-coming of wounded soldiers is a strange contrast to their going out. They go forth amid shouts, and huzzas, and wild excitement; they return in deep silence, with few to welcome them. Perhaps they are not even received by the loving hearts that wept when they went away. A poor purse cannot afford a journey to Southampton. But it is well to remember that the broken, maimed men are quietly returning. The Morning Post has very properly counselled modesty and the suppression of boastfulness; the dead, the wounded, the prisoners exhort us in the same way.

We are sure we can command the continued sympathy and prayers of our readers with respect to Mr. D. L. Moody. The latest cablegram news of his condition is "Improving, still anxious, invite prayers."

Beginning with the issue of January 4, our notes on Sunday-school lessons will be accompanied by a diagram, or illustration, affording a key to the lesson. Parents and teachers will find this a very great help in dealing with the young folk.

An esteemed correspondent, reading C.H.M.'s "Notes on Numbers," was struck by the following passage:—

> We believe it will invariably be found that in proportion as Christians become clear and settled on the Divine ground of accomplished redemption, they get further and further away from the Romanism and Judaism of an order of priests in the Church of God. And, on the other hand, where souls are not clear, not settled, not spiritual, where there is legality, carnality, and worldliness, there you will find a hankering after a humanly-appointed priesthood. Nor is it difficult to see the reason of this. If a man is not himself in a fit state to draw nigh to God, it will be a relief to him to employ another to draw nigh for him. And, most certainly, no man is in a fit state to draw nigh to a holy God who does not know that his sins are forgiven—has not got a perfectly purged conscience—is in a dark, doubting, legal state of soul. In order to come boldly into the Holiest of All, we must know what the blood of Christ has done for us; we must know that we ourselves are made priests to God; and that, in virtue of the atoning death of Christ, we are brought so near to God that it is impossible for any order of men to come between.

These are words fitly framed, and express a truth which Christian people would do well to take to heart at the present day.

This is a day of evangelistic work organized on a large scale. The advent of the Free Church Council has provided splendid facilities for united missions, and throughout the country is heard the news of, or preparation for, such work. The organization is usually very thorough, and money is not spared in providing every available agency likely to promote success.

All this is very good, but there is a danger of the rank and file of the Christian people forgetting their responsibility for the personal work and influence which has been the dominating factor in all extensive revival. Some seem inclined to think that they have nothing to do but pray and look on. By all means let us use the net in our fishing, and the larger the net the better. But every man cannot use the net, and it will prove but a poor gain if the extension in this direction be but a substitute for the individual activity in which every Christian uses his own rod and line. Probably none feel this more strongly than the men who are leading in this extending movement.

There surely is much of wisdom and foresight in the view of an American clergyman that the next century will see a great unification of Christendom, resting not on organization or in the form of doctrine, but rather on simple loyalty to Christ as the Head of spiritual humanity. He wishes for a succession of apostles, not an apostolic succession; for a pastoral, rather than the priestly conception of the ministry; and for the restoration of the Church's moral discipline as the only true basis of her spiritual life. In belief he would have "absolute intellectual freedom"—we presume so far as human creeds and doctrines go. Readers of our pages know how high a value we set upon doctrine as contained in Scripture, which is simply the Divine explanation of facts in the life and ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ; but we believe that unity here is the most likely to be attained by each one doing the will of Christ, and walking in love with his brethren.

A biography of the late Bishop of Bangor, Dr. Daniel Lewis-Lloyd, who died recently, would be a valuable addition to the literature of "Self-Help," and full of encouragement to those who are desirous of being helpful to others, and of doing good in the world. Commencing his working life as a shop-boy at Aberavon, by his own efforts he managed to prepare himself for Oxford, and afterwards passed from the schoolmaster's desk to a curacy, and finally became the seventy-first Bishop of Bangor. Such life stories are precious at a time when there is a strong tendency to eulogize the capitalists and millionaires who have built up huge fortunes, only too frequently in ways which will not bear the light of Christ's teachings.

It is not in man to direct his steps. Why a Christian man goes here and does not go there may often be very perplexing to him; indeed, he may know nothing of the reason for years. He may be unequal to a certain effort, and yet feel compelled to make it; and, when he has made it, he may find the reason in a special blessing sent to some soul through him. When the late Dr. Berry's health was in a critical state, and his physician had forbidden him to preach, he nevertheless braced himself for the exertion. Next morning he received a letter, in which the writer said:—

> I felt I must come to Queen Street Chapel before I went down to New Bridge. I had never heard you preach, but I felt I must hear you to-night. How did you know that I was there, and that I was going to put an end to myself? I went home instead, and I am writing to tell you that the sermon you preached to me to-night saved my life and saved my soul. May God bless you!

It is also encouraging that the Women's Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society have decided to take steps to provide a reformatory for female inebriates who are frequently brought up at the police courts. The magistrates who have hitherto, in consequence of there being no institution of the kind, been unable to take advantage of the Act of 1898 in regard to habitual drunkards, will soon be in a position to avail themselves of its provisions. The urgency of the need is evident to all who have recognised the rapid growth of intemperance among women of late years.

A recent statement made by Mr. Justice Barnes confirms the views we have frequently expressed in respect of the matter. At a recent meeting of the Royal Courts of Justice Temperance Society, he said that he had had eight years' experience of the Divorce Court, and that, in the majority of the cases with which he had to deal, drink was the cause of the unhappiness. He had met many cases of horrible demoralization in women, the result of intemperate habits. "In men intemperance led to the Divorce Court by producing brutality at home and immorality, and in women the results were even worse."

It is gratifying to note, from the proceedings at the recent Temperance Conference in Manchester, that the Government will not be permitted to shelve the report made by Lord Peel's Licensing Commission. If the suggested legislation even were confined to the recommendations on which the minority and the majority of the Commissioners were agreed, some excellent results would be secured: such, for instance, as a considerable reduction in the hours during which public-houses are open on Sundays, a lengthening of the bonâ-fide travellers' distances, the registration of all clubs, and the conferring upon the police power to arrest in cases of simple drunkenness. These extensions, with further power to the licensing authorities, would go a long way to bring about the much-desired reform, and we heartily join the Conference in calling upon all Christian reformers to unite to have the subject brought before Parliament next session.

The Evangelical Section of the Church of England, it is quite clear, is not at all satisfied with the result of the Archbishops' "opinion." The conviction is widespread that it has simply trifled with the great questions at issue. To emphasize this, arrangements are almost complete for another Protestant demonstration to be held in Albert Hall on January 30. There is every reason to believe that the coming protest against sacerdotalism will be as remarkable as the first. Christian people, loyal to Gospel truth, feel that the "crisis" is not yet passed. Submissions to the bishops in some instances only direct attention to other cases of defiant lawlessness. The Earl of Portsmouth will preside at the next demonstration. The list of speakers contains the names of leading men in all the evangelical churches.

The way in which the Ritualists are capturing the strategic positions on the Anglican religious press has been shown in a startling fashion in the enforced resignation of Mr. D. C. Lathbury from the editorship of The Guardian, in which he has had the controlling hand for sixteen years. His crime is the way he has advocated loyal submission on the part of the clergy in the matter of the Archbishops' recent decision regarding the use of "incense" and "candles." This is not only a misfortune to the law-abiding section in the Church of England, but a blow at the highest interests of religious journalism. The Guardian, under Mr. Lathbury's editorship, has made itself felt as the ablest, the most balanced, and the most courteous of the High Anglican journals, contrasting greatly with the attitude and temper of some of its contemporaries. That he should be ousted from his honourable post on a reason of this kind is clear indication that the battle of Ritualism is far from being over yet.

One direction in which the sacerdotal party in the Church is endeavouring to tighten its hold on the community is through the charitable institutions. An instance has just come to light in the case of the National Industrial Home for Boys at Kensington, which was founded "to receive for three years, board, clothe, and educate on Christian principles, destitute, neglected, or ill-used boys." Up till recently, the Sunday evening services have been conducted by laymen of various denominations, with a free use of voluntary and extempore prayer. Gradually this liberty has been restricted more and more, and now the use of the Prayer Book has been made compulsory and exclusive, on the ground that the institution is "conducted on strictly Church of England principles." The committee, on being appealed to by Nonconformist subscribers to return to the broader Christian basis, have declined to interfere with the new arrangement. This policy of gradual encroachment is being carried out by the sacerdotal party in every possible direction.

The relation of Christianity to what are called the "ethnic faiths" has often been dealt with most unsatisfactorily by thinkers who have but a shallow acquaintance with either. Increasing knowledge of the heathen religions, as they really are, is helping to put this matter right. Buddhism, for instance, which has often been referred to, even by English writers, as a kind of future rival to Christianity in the East, as a philosophical religion, is now taking its proper place in the background, both as a "religion" and a code of ethics. Bishop Moorhouse has rendered a service to the cause of truth by his recent address on this subject, in which he summed up the contrast between Christianity and Buddhism in these terse and wise words:—

The one teaches us to find eternal life in the knowledge of God, the other in the knowledge of nothing. The one bids us rejoice in a love which unites us with God and our neighbour; the other denounces all love as the source of sorrow.

Those who keep on affirming that the Eastern peoples who prefer such a travesty of religion should be left to themselves would do well to ponder this address deeply.

So rarely is any fervent recognition of Divine blessing officially expressed on behalf of a people, that we observe with feelings of special interest and thankfulness the statement made by the Chicago Journal, that—

One of the most unique Thanksgiving proclamations ever issued has been sent out by Governor George W. Atkinson, of West Virginia. It is neatly printed and bound, containing the great seal of West Virginia. It sets forth the reasons for giving thanks, followed by a number of scriptural quotations. The proclamation runs as follows:—

"In accordance with the time-honoured custom, and one worthy to be continued in all civilized lands, I hereby set apart Thursday, November 30, 1899, as a day of thanksgiving, praise, and prayer to the Almighty God for his mercy and goodness to the people of our state and country; and I request that this day may be observed as such by a cessation from all business vocations and by public gatherings in consecrated places, in order that God may be glorified for the bountiful blessings he has bestowed upon all our people.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most high (Psa. xcii. 1.)"

Governor Atkinson adds no less than twenty-two other aptly-chosen texts, which breathe a spirit of thanksgiving and praise, concluding with the words from 1 Chron. xiii. 30, "Stand every morning to praise the Lord, and likewise at even."

A remarkable forward movement amongst Congregational churches in the United States in favour of foreign missions receives grateful recognition in the columns of the Congregationalist (Boston). The new president of the American Board of Missions, Mr. S. B. Capen, is vigorously supporting this advance for Christ. The idea is that each Church should provide for the entire support of at least one foreign missionary and his family. Already the suggestion has been warmly approved and steps have been taken to carry it out. Over 1,500dols. (£300) was promised at one meeting in Dr. Hill's church, Woburn, Mass., recently. A missionary has been chosen who shall be the especial charge of the Woburn Church. Other churches need little persuasion to fall into line. Such a scheme as this will deepen immensely personal interest in the Lord's work in heathen lands, and if carried out with energy will undoubtedly yield a large increase in funds, and issue in a great ingathering of souls.

The striking annual increase in the amount of property in the possession of the heads of the Roman Catholic body in Ireland, as illustrated by the bequests notified in the Gazette twice weekly, and by the frequent purchase of mansions and estates, appears to be equalled if not exceeded, by that in France. In that country, after the Revolution, not one convent or Romish endowment was left, and to-day the value of the property possessed by the religious orders is estimated at three hundred and twenty millions sterling, without including that held by the secular clergy. Doubtless, as is the case in Ireland, much of this accumulation is the result of the influence of the priest at the bedside, with its consequent disputes in the law courts; and there seems reason to believe that before long the scandal will terminate in a further confiscation by the State.

In the rules of "The Pious Propaganda of the Rosary for the Dead," recently issued, it is announced that the person who recites the stipulated form, and concludes with "Sweet Heart of Mary, be my Salvation," gains no less than 23,300 days' indulgences;" and also that the simple recitation of the "Acts of Faith, Hope, and Charity" gains an indulgence of seven years and seven quarantines, 300 days additional being gained each time the above remarkable invocation is uttered. All this, it appears, is guaranteed under a Brief of the Pope's, the benefits to go to the suffering souls in Purgatory! The recent strides taken by Rome in the substitution of the Virgin for the Saviour of mankind, are well illustrated by this noteworthy leaflet; and, as one step of the kind necessitates another, it may not be long before we again have another Tetzel traffioking in indulgences of a less impersonal kind.

Cardinal Vaughan's intention of devoting the whole of next year to a special effort to convert this country to Romanism excites no sympathy in the chief High Church paper, which thinks the time chosen is the worst that could be. It thinks that there must be something so radically wrong with Rome, that she rather needs conversion by England than England needs it by her. There is a natural antipathy between the Latin and the Saxon races, as may be seen in the Romish Communion in the United States.

One day, we believe, it will break away from all control, and even we may live to see repeated in the New World the great achievement won by the National Church of England three centuries ago—emancipation from a foreign religious yoke. Whatever England may become, she will never submit to the rule of a clique of Italian ecclesiastics.

Who would believe that this language is held by men who, awhile ago, were craving Rome to admit the validity of their orders? Is this all genuine, or only a blind?

England's Reverses.— A Solemn Call to Prayer.

"CALL A DAY OF RESTRAINT."
Joel i. 14 (marg.).

ANOTHER terrible reverse, and worse than any that have preceded it—disastrous and humiliating as those have been. Think of the slain and wounded thousands, the broken hearts of the bereaved, the anguished anxiety of those whose sons and brothers and fathers are in the war—on both sides. Do these calamities mean anything? Arethey saying to Great Britain and Ireland and our Colonies: "Hear the rod and Him who hoath appointed it"?

Why is this the leading nation of the world? Because the Gospel of God has had freer course in it than in any other; and God has been true to his word: "Them that honour Me I will honour." So far as we have honoured Him, He has abundantly honoured us.

But the seal has another side, and on the obverse is engraved: "They that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed."

Has not this country, like Jeshurun, waxed fat and kicked? Has it not trusted in its armies and its generals, and not in the living God? "More men, more artillery, more cavalry," has been the cry. And the hopes and expectations of the nation have been built upon the Chief Commander, who was expected to retrieve the disasters of his forerunners. But the Nation, as a nation, has not lifted up its hands in prayer, nor humbled itself under the mighty hand of God. Some of its transports have been stranded, cavalry horses drowned, and, in the last engagement, eleven of its guns have been taken by the enemy.

This crowning disaster has happened to the General in command before he had had the opportunity of proving by one success his desert of the trust reposed in him.

Is not the hand of God in all this? or

HAS GOD FORSAKEN US?

It is not our intention to make light of the self-abandoning bravery of our home and colonial officers and men, whether on the field or in beleaguered camps. Never were these qualities more signally displayed. But these only make the defeats the more significant.

Is the nation fighting in an unrighteous cause? We do not think it is. The very successes of our antagonists, their abundant armaments and war supplies, and their evident preparedness, indicate that they had for years intended war. We write of them without vindictiveness or bitterness, and of their sufferers with unfeigned sorrow and sympathy.

The ways of God are equal, whether to a nation or to a man only. And his eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men—and nations. What do his eyes behold in us as a nation?

In self-confidence; in making haste to be rich; in making drunkenness easy, and in honouring drunkard-makers; in gambling prevalent among all classes; in increasing contempt of God's Day of Rest; in the wicked opium traffic; in providing for carnality in the army at the cost of the bodies and souls of men and women; in cruel neglect of the poor; in defying God's precept that "we who are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves;" in permitting them to be housed so that decency is impossible, and with less care for their health and comfort than for those of cattle or dogs; in the loose and lewd speech allowed in society; in the leaven of pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness; in indelicate plays and their degrading associations; in contemptuous forgetfulness of our forefathers, martyred to secure thel iberties which we enjoy; in a shameful dalliance with the pagan papalism which tortured, hanged, and burned them; in adultery and divorce among the rich, and promiscuous living among the poor; in a state of society treading in the decadent footsteps of ancient Greece and Rome—in all this, is there no reason why God should permit the reverses we have suffered?

Is there at this time no call to the Empire that regards itself as "heir of all the ages in the foremost files of time," to repent in sackcloth and ashes, and to seek the Lord? Is there no call for all the congregations of God in the Empire to cry mightily until that He have mercy upon us?

Will not the advisers of our beloved Queen, the ministers of the Crown; will not the Primate, archbishops and bishops; will not the angels of all the churches; will not all who fear God in the whole Empire, cry out for an immediate day or days of

for God's long suffering with our sins, and his abundant loving kindness and tender mercy? And, at this juncture, shall not these be the leading features of the individual, social, and family prayer of all his people?

The Evangelical Alliance has done well to issue an invitation to observe Sunday, January 7, the first day of the Week of Prayer, as a day of humiliation, confession, and supplication. We cordially support it.

But if God is to deal graciously with us as a nation, we must, as a nation, humble ourselves, and pour out our hearts before Him. And the call to the Nation must proceed from those in authority at the head of the Nation, and who represent the Nation. Probably they will not move until they see that the Nation itself is moved. For the Government follows and obeys, as well as leads and rules, the Nation.

Is it not, therefore, imperative on all who feel the need of humiliation, confession, and prayer to make their desire known and felt as emphatically and as generally as possible, so that the Government may be impelled and compelled to give effect to the Nation's desire, humbled as in sackcloth and ashes, to draw near to God? "Then will the Lord be jealous for his land and pity his people."

MEETINGS AT BRIGHTON.

A MEETING for prayer and humiliation on account of the war was held in the Assembly Room of the Y.M.C.A., Brighton, on Saturday—the day before collections were to be made in all the churches of the town for the War Relief Fund. The meeting was convened by the local committee of the Evangelical Alliance, of which Revs. J. B. Figgis, Dr. Morris, and Col. B. J. Goldie are secretaries.

Rev. Hubert Brooke, who presided, spoke appropriately from Judges xx. 21. It was a time of civil war between the tribe of Benjamin and the rest of Israel. Israel met defeat, and lost 25,000 men. This may teach us, said Mr. Brooke, that there may be conflict, and the contending parties both be God's children, and one of the combatants may have not merely might but right on his side, and yet may suffer defeat. A country may be fighting for a righteous cause, and yet have sins to answer for, for which the discipline of defeat may be a sad necessity; and are there not with us sins against the Lord?

Among seven sins the wise man refers to, pride is placed first. Let us humble ourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God.

With words of this import Mr. Brooke left the meeting in the hands of any led by God to offer prayer, those who followed representing, without any previous arrangement, most branches of the Church of Christ.

It was announced that a similar meeting would be held at the Brighton Y.M.C.A. on Saturday, 23rd, at 12 o'clock, at which Mr. Henry Varley will preside. We should be glad to hear of similar meetings—not for speaking, but for humiliation and prayer—being held all over the land, and in all the lands that own the sway of our venerable sovereign, a touching prayer for whom was a marked note in the meeting at Brighton.

IT was a deeply interesting sight at noon on Saturday last to see the Assembly Hall at the Y.M.C.A., Brighton, crowded to the doors with Christian men and women. Though the notice was so brief, it sufficed to bring together a large company for special and fervent prayer. There was no mistaking the spirit of the assembly. All present appeared to feel that the hand of God had gone out against us in national judgment. The series of reverses yielding the death, wounding, and taking captive of so many of our soldiers in South Africa, followed by the loss on Friday of so many of our guns, horses, and men, speak loudly as to the fact that God's stern rebukes are upon us as a nation. The spirit of solemn humiliation and of fervent cries to God possessed all hearts and minds. Such confessions of sin were made, and the laying bare, with deep sense of shame, our national boasting, coupled with ungodly disregard of the Divine laws and of the supreme authority of the living God.

In a very solemn sense it was good to be there. Like Joshua, after the defeat at Ai (Josh., chap. vii.), there was, in a deep spiritual sense, the lying on the face before Jehovah.

Speaking of Joshua, what an example he gives of a great military commander suffering defeat! Though Israel had lost but thirty-six men through under-estimating the power of the men of Ai, he did not seek to hide the fact that in some way the strength of Israel had been compromised. He did not say this is a mere skirmish, and predict revenge. Joshua had matriculated in the School of God. His military training was not the total of his discipline. He knew the Captain of the Lord's host, and was aware that this failure meant his temporary absence and displeasure.

What a picture! Joshua and the elders of Israel lying on their faces before the Ark of the Lord, and putting dust upon their heads. How pathetic, and yet true, the position of this earthly leader of Israel's hosts. There they lay until the going down of the sun; but as the natural light faded the light of Israel is revealed.

Now Jehovah's interposition met all the need. How inspiring and suggestive his Word. "Up; why liest thou upon thy face?" Israel hath sinned, and they have transgressed my covenant. "They have even taken of the accursed thing, and have stolen, and have dissembled also." "Up, sanctify the people," &c. Then came the search for the accursed thing; then the judgment of the guilty, and then Israel's restoration and victory.

Henry Varley.

PRIVATE INTERCESSION.

I SHARE with yourself and Christian readers in the earnest hope that, in view of the present national distress, a day will (without further delay) be set apart for public confession and supplication to Almighty God. Surely there is instant need for this—witness the thrice repeated repulse of our arms, the slaughter and capture of so many of our brave soldiers of all ranks, the daily increasing number of bereaved, broken-hearted families all over the land, to say nothing of the almost utter lack of any open acknowledgment on the part of our rulers of our dependence on the arm of the living God for victory. Meanwhile, should not all true lovers of Christ and country give themselves to the work of private intercession? Might not Congregational and other meetings be multiplied in every place? The approaching United New Year prayer gatherings of the Evangelical Alliance offer a precious opportunity for all who have a heart to come together and pray in this time of our grief and peril.

Better to humble ourselves before God, than to be humiliated before our enemies. "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord for his mercies are great, and let us not fall into the hand of man."

Frank H. White, Pastor.

DAYS ALREADY APPOINTED.

THE Committee of the Central Young Men's Christian Association have arranged for two meetings for prayer and humiliation, to be held at Exeter Hall on Monday, January 1, 1900.

The first meeting will take place from 12 noon to 2 p.m., and will be conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.; and the second gathering will be held from 3.30 to 5.30 p.m., and will be presided over by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A.

At this solemn crisis in our country's history the Committee very earnestly invite the attendance of Christian friends of all denominations at these gatherings.

As already stated, the Evangelical Alliance fixes Sunday, Jan. 7, for a similar observance.

Thoughts on Sin.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

V.—A Reminder (Rom. vi. 20).

"FOR when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness." Slavery to sin is freedom from righteousness. Alas! that is a sorry freedom. True freedom consists in doing what is right, and slavery of the worst kind is found in wrong-doing, as Cowper says:

> He is the freeman, whom the truth makes free,
> And all are slaves beside.

To be free from righteousness is to be like the rudderless vessel driven hither and thither by the winds and waves. To live for self is to consume what we have of what is best and noble, as the prodigal found, for his self-willed request, "give me," ended with the perishing with hunger in the far country. He who harbours this world's wealth harbours the dust of covetousness, the rust of fretfulness, the moth of discontent, and breeds the thieves of care.

Waldensian Church Missions, in Italy.—Aosta, an old Roman city, located in the valley of that name, contains many monuments, but none of more unique interest than the pyramid in Croix de Ville Street, which commemorates the flight of John Calvin on September 8, 1536. The Waldenses own a house in the same street, where they have gathered a congregation of forty-eight souls; but as the room in which Divine service is conducted is on the second floor, evangelistic efforts are somewhat crippled. The Waldenses are willing to transform their house into a neat chapel if friends will kindly help to cover the expense. The secretary in England is Colonel Martin Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

Moravian Missions.—The quarterly paper of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions is especially notable for the Synodal Letter, signed by the President. In this letter is solemnly renewed the declaration of adherence to the doctrine of the Brethren's Church, as set forth in the Results of the General Synod of 1889. The mission work of the Moravian Church is its own vindication. An English Bishop once remarked that the Moravian Missions were "the best in the world," for "they have done greater work, with extremely small means, than any other missionaries." There are now 182 stations, but about £30,000 forms the entire annual expenditure, of which nearly two-thirds are being raised from various sources (native contributions, grants, trade, etc.) in the foreign field. Communications may be addressed to the secretaries, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

The Delay of the Incarnation;

or, "The Fulness of the Time."

IT is the infirmity of small minds that they are impatient with slow moral processes. They must see the whole plan, from inception to consummation, worked out before them, or they refuse their belief in it. So long as any person remains destitute of faith, the method of the Divine government can only continue to be to him an ever-deepening puzzle; but when the Eternal Light has broken upon the soul, we perceive that the little are visible to us is part of a grand circle which dips into two eternities.

We have to face the fact that God nearly always works slowly. The physical universe has been a most slow development. Our own world has been unnumbered millenniums emerging out of fire and mist into the habitable state in which we now behold it.

In his training of men He has progressed so gently that often whole generations have come and gone, and failed to detect any advance. At some time or other every thoughtful Christian has been aghast at the contemplation of the delay in God's redemptive work. Four millenniums passed before the Redeemer came. The delay seems like negligence. Surely, if redemption were a wise work, it should have been accomplished earlier! And some have dared to say that the late Advent, however beneficial for those who followed it, was detrimental to the ages that preceded it.

How foolish we are! How easily we go astray! God appoints his hour, directed by his infinite wisdom; and He acts promptly at the given moment. He came, as the Apostle phrases it, "in the fulness of the time."

Does it seem as if some injustice had been done to the old world on account of the late appearance of our Blessed Lord? For one thing it may be as well to say at once that there can be no question of "injustice" where everything is a matter of Free Grace. For another thing, the God whose loving heart announced a Redeemer at the moment of the Fall can be trusted to fulfil his promise.

1. The Love of God is not compromised in the postponement of the Incarnation. No person's salvation was sacrificed for the reason that Jesus had not yet appeared—lived and died. Long ere the blood upon Calvary was shed, the prophets announced, in the name of God, that men's sins might, though as scarlet, become white as snow. Forgiveness was proclaimed to every penitent, and the Spirit of God caused men to cry, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." Some of the great souls, like Abraham, saw from afar the day of Christ, and were glad.

TO ENLIGHTENED SOULS

the perpetual sacrifices offered upon the altar were mere figures of one great and final sacrifice which should one day be offered for the sins of the whole world. Others, without doubt, came to God in penitence, drawn by a Holy Spirit whom they knew not, to be accepted through a Mediator whose earthly manifestation was centuries away. Their ignorance of Christ did not prevent God from accepting them through his merits. This brings us to the very heart of the whole matter.

It is often assumed that our Lord began his mediatorial work when He appeared amongst men in his incarnate life, and that it is chiefly confined to the one great dread act of Good Friday. The Scripture teaches nothing of the kind. Its message is that "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." He is "the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world." His Redemption was no accident, no afterthought; it is part of the web and woof of God's providential dealings with men. Whoever, in the olden days before Christ, came to God, came to Him through Jesus Christ, who is the sole Mediator between God and men. And, I repeat, the fact that they did not know to whom they were did not prevent them being accepted. The Incarnation was a manifestation—a sending forth—a visible representation of what was always true.

So that the delay in the Incarnation does not compromise the love of God: every soul who would be saved was saved.

2. But why the delay? We must clearly distinguish between God's dealings with individuals and his dealings with the race as a whole. He does not save the race as a race, He saves men individually. But his great providential manifestations are not made to individuals only, but to the race. His guiding star is given to three men only, but his SUN shines in the heavens for everybody. His Salvation was never delayed, but his manifestation of it was delayed until "the fulness of the time."

There were reasons in men why God should delay the Incarnation. From the time of Noah, God's prophets had preached to sinners—everywhere and always to encounter ridicule and unbelief. The world did not believe it was sick, therefore it made sport of the Physician. The Divine Physician, therefore, in his wisdom allowed the race to feel its pain and misery until it should at last cry out for Him. So He waited until the fulness of the time, until men were fatigued, crushed, and despairing. He allowed them to increase the number of false divinities until they were satiated with gods. He allowed them to degrade themselves, until oppression cried for relief. Then the heart cried out for the unknown God. From the far East to the proud West a universal expectation arose that a Deliverer was approaching. This is a most wonderful thing, that practically all the world waited for Christ at the time of his coming. It was then that God timed Himself to appear amongst us. O loving wisdom of our God! Blessed delay! He allowed humanity to fatigue itself that it might seek Him at last.

And there were reasons in God for the delay. The majesty of Christ demanded a suitable preparation in history. This Divine King demanded worthy outrunners. God provided them—a wonderful procession of prophets, priests, and kings; an advance guard for the Most High. There is no need to dwell upon this. Loving hearts will readily linger over the old records, and ponder the ancient figures, beholding in them the advancing columns of that cortège which shall never end. Preceded by adorers, He has been followed by adorers, whose numbers shall ever grow until every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess Him to be Lord.

At this Christmastide let us adore the wisdom of God for his "magnificent slowness." He hath done all things well.

There was a "fulness of time" in history for his Incarnation; there is also a fulness of time in every human life for his "coming in to us and dwelling with us." And it would be a happy thing for the writer of these words if he knew that some reader had seen his great opportunity and become, by faith, a dwelling-place for Jesus Christ.

A Forty Years' Record.

IT is not often granted to a worker to look back upon forty years of ministry while yet actively engaged in Christian service. This, however, is the privilege and joy of Rev. Michael Nachim, the well-known Jewish missionary, and one of the highly-esteemed representatives of the British Jews' Society.

Work among the Hebrew people has its peculiar difficulties, and those who engage in it require much sustaining grace, to carry them through conflicts with prejudice, and to enable them to persevere in spite of frequent disappointment. Mr. Nachim has made it clear, alike to those among whom he has laboured, and to his brethren in the Jewish Mission, that God has blessed him with this grace and power. For about eighteen years he testified for Christ in South-Eastern Europe, and gained the confidence of some of the most bigoted Jews of Roumania. Since then London has been his centre, and on all hands in Spitalfields you will hear kind words spoken of him as a friend of Israel and an earnest minister of Christ.

Though he has thus completed forty years of service, Mr. Nachim is yet in possession of all his powers, and still impresses the onlooker by his stately bearing, and the listener by his vigorous preaching. He also remains the same as a man—genial and kind, hearty and sincere; he is to friends of to-day what he was to acquaintances when he began his mission career forty years ago. It is not surprising that, in these circumstances, his brethren in the work should look with interest upon the present year. They conceived the idea of a meeting at which they might unite in praise to God for our brother's happy and successful ministry, and at the same time encourage him to continue, with the hope of being more fully blessed in the future than he has realized in the past.

The pleasant gathering was held on Friday afternoon last week at the Mission House, 15, Fournier Street, Spitalfields; and as one scanned the little company one was forced to the conclusion that, whatever may be their differences of view or of operation, these Hebrew Christian workers, nevertheless, love one another right well. Men of all societies, and men who stand aside from organizations, joined in prayer and praise, and strengthened one another in the God of Jacob. Rev. I. Levinson, secretary of the British Society, presided; and among others who spoke were his colleague, Rev. A. Sternberg, and the venerable Rev. G. H. Händler, of the London Society. These friends attributed the improved behaviour of Jews at Gospel meetings in a large degree to the reasonable firmness of Mr. Nachim, whose conduct and bearing is an admirable blend of the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re.

Mr. Nachim also spoke, acknowledging the goodness of God and the kindness of brethren all through his long missionary pilgrimage. Those who led in prayer included Messrs. M. S. Bergmann and H. Barnett, and all present must have felt that the proceedings were a token for good, not only to Mr. Nachim on this anniversary, but also to others of like faith and labour in the cause of Israel.

Reading for the Blind.—Early in 1898 a blind and deaf man, residing at St. Leonard's Home for the Blind, commenced a small religious monthly magazine in the Braille type, entitled "The Lamp of Truth and Love." He resolved that no charge should be made for the magazine, but to rely on contributions of friends to meet the expenses. He received many letters expressing gratitude and appreciation of the work, one saying that she had prayed that some one might be influenced to start such a magazine. The circulation has steadily increased, and now nearly fifty copies are issued monthly and sent forth to all parts of the kingdom. Hence there is a desire to get the magazine stereotyped; and as the worker wishes to adhere to the principle of sending the truth forth gratis, but has no resources of his own, he depends upon the co-operation of the friends of the blind. The cost is not less than 30s., and fresh applications are received every week, so that the cost will probably soon exceed that amount. In future the magazine will be called "Channels of Blessing." The editor is Miss Brookfield, of Hove. Application for copies to Mr. E. Norris, 21, St. Peter's Road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

Schools for Bible Study.

THE last of Rev. Hubert Brooke's series of addresses at Exeter Hall was given on the 13th inst. The subject was Deuteronomy, which the speaker dealt with under the following heads:—

Introduction.—1. The title is Greek, meaning "The Second Giving of the Law" (cp. Deut. v. 6-21; Ex. xx. 1-17). The Hebrew title is: "These are the words." It is the book of the parting words of Moses, and contains the words, testimonies, statutes, and judgments of the Lord. 2. It is quoted by our Lord three times in the Temptation (Matt. iv. 4-10); as part of the "law" (John viii. 17); as Moses' writing (Matt. xix. 7, 8); and frequently in Acts and Apostolic writings (Acts iii. 22; vii. 37; viii. 23; Rom. x. 6; xiii. 9; 1 Cor. ix. 9; Gal. iii. 10, 13; Eph. vi. 2, 3; 1 Tim. v. 18; Heb. xii. 29, &c.). 3. It occupies the last month of the forty years' wandering (i. 3); and the opening days of the next year (xxxiv. 8; Jos. iv. 19).

Divisions.—1. Four main parts: (a) Review (i.-iv.); (b) Rehearsal of the Law (v.-xi.); (c) Revelation of new laws for use "in the land" (xii.-xxvi.); (d) Recapitulation and conclusion (xxvii.-xxxiv.). 2. Subdivisions: (a) Sinai to Kadesh (i.); Kadesh to Moab (ii.); Conquest of East of Jordan (iii.); warnings (iv.). (b) The Ten Commandments (v.); the spirit of the first Table, and opposition to idolatry (vi., vii.); the danger of self-righteousness (viii.-x.); past judgments on sin (xi.). (c) Special enactments, touching religion (xii.-xvi. 17; government and the executive (xvi. 18-xxi.); private and social life (xxii.-xxvi.). (d) The law written and accepted (xxvii.); the Blessing and the Curse (xxviii.); Moses' exhortation (xxix., xxx.); charge to priests and Joshua (xxxi.); the Song of Moses (xxxii.); the blessings of Moses (xxxiii.); the conclusion (probably by Joshua) (xxxiv.).

Key Notes.—1. Is professedly an introduction to the entrance upon the promised land; repeating the original lessons to Israel. 2. Emphatic words and phrases: "The land," 126 times; "give," in connection with the land, 72; "this day," 71; "possess," 66.

Personal Use.—1. The book contains the great lesson of consecration: (a) On the ground of past blessings (Rom. xii. 1, 2). (b) In connection with the law, in the heart (Rom. xiii. 8-10). (c) On condition of obedience (2 Cor. x. 4-6). 2. Consecration is the outcome of grace (2 Cor. v. 14, 15); a matter of immediate action (2 Cor. vi. 1, 2; Heb. iii. 8); and has in view the possession of fuller blessings (2 Pet. i. 5-11). 3. The order of the books is that of experience in the soul: Ruin, taught in Gen.; Redemption, in Ex.; Access and Worship, Lev.; Guidance and Rule, Num.; Consecration, Deut.; in view of the possession of fuller blessings, Joshua.

Rev. G. SOLTAU'S LECTURES.

The object of Rev. G. Soltau's last lecture was to group chronologically the events of the closing week of our Lord's ministry. Mr. Soltau's chief points were as follows:—

The Closing Week. 8th Nisan, supper in Bethany (John xii. 1-8); 9th, Sabbath Day; 10th, triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. xxi. 1-11; Mark xi. 10; Luke xix. 29, 40; John xii. 12-19); 11th, the fig-tree incident (Matt. xxi. 18; Mark xi. 12); 12th and 13th, the fig-tree withered (Mark xi. 20); and the delivery of the discourses recorded in Matt. xxi.-xxv., Mark xi.-xiii., Luke xx. and xxi. (It was in the evening of the 12th Nisan apparently that the Lord paid his last visit to the temple, and later on gave to the disciples, the prophetic foreview of the nation's history.) 14th, passover supper: washing the disciples' feet (Matt. xxvi. 17-29; Mark xiv. 12-25; Luke xxii. 7-38; John xiii.); the closing discourse and prayer (John xiv.-xvii.); the Gethsemane scene (Matt. xxvi. 30-46; Mark xiv. 32-42; Luke xxii. 39-46; John xviii. 1); the betrayal (Matt. xxvi. 47-56; Mark xiv. 43-50; Luke xxii. 47-53; John xviii. 2-11); 15th, the Crucifixion, first day of the feast of unleavened bread: 16th, the Sabbath Day; 17th, the Resurrection, the presentation of the wave sheaf of the first-fruits in the temple.

The Trials of the Lord were—first, before Annas (John xviii. 13-23) between 12 and 2 a.m. Second, before Caiaphas (Matt. xxvi. 57-66; Mark xiv. 53, 65; Luke xxii. 54-62; John xviii. 24). Here occur Peter's denials; the scourging on the face with rods by Jews in the High Priest's house, were between 12 and 2 a.m. Next an interval, probably during which the Lord was imprisoned; 3rd, before the Council of the Jews, between 5.30 and 6 p.m. (Luke xxii. 66-71); 4th, before Pilate (John xviii. 28-32); 5th before Pilate (Matt. xxvii. 11-14; Mark xv. 1-5; Luke xxiii. 1-4; John xviii. 33-38; 6th, before Herod (Luke xxiii. 7-12); 7th, before Pilate, when the Barabbas incident occurred at the scourging (Matt. xxvii. 16-21; Mark xv. 6-14; Luke xxiii. 13-18; John xix. 1-8). One more effort was made by Pilate to release him. The eighth trial before Pilate then took place, when the appeal and reproach of not being Cæsar's friend settled the matter, and he delivered Jesus to be crucified (Matt. xxvii. 26; Mark xv. 15; Luke xxiii. 25; John xix. 9-16).

The Writing on the Cross. Matt. xxvii. 37: His accusation, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." Mark xv. 28: The superscription of his accusation, "The King of the Jews." Luke xxiii. 36: A superscription, "This is the King of the Jews." John xix. 19: A title, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Scripture Gift Mission.

RARELY, if ever, does any society working for the moral and spiritual welfare of the people of her realm long escape the notice and approval of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

Her Majesty has had the Scripture Gift Mission brought to her notice through Mr. Henry Harper, who is editor of the Illustrated Bible, and Her Majesty has graciously accepted from Mr. Harper copies of the Illustrated Gospels, and ordered other copies from Mr. Walters, the founder and director of the Mission. These copies are now being presented to soldiers of the British Army, serving, or warned for service, in South Africa.

Her Majesty, as is well known, is anxiously concerned for the progress of the Kingdom of Christ, and recognises that only as they are composed of Christian soldiers can her armies ever be really great and strong. It is gratifying, therefore, that the Illustrated Gospels (the specialty of the Scripture Gift Mission), which have been so richly blessed both in the ranks of the army and among the teeming millions in heathen lands, should enlist the interest and win the support of Her Majesty.

Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has also accepted copies of the four Gospels as presented to H.R.H. by Mr. Harper, and has ordered other copies and despatched them to South Africa.

All friends of the Scripture Gift Mission will be pleased to hear of this manifestation of interest by the Royal House in an unostentatious but excellent work; which only needs to be better known in order to gain a much larger circle of supporters. We hear that donations are much needed to supply the whole of the soldiers on active service with copies of these little Gospels, which are much prized by men of all ranks. Communications to Mr. Walters should be addressed to the office of the Mission, 15, Strand, London, W.C.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—In connection with the educational work of this institution, evening classes are arranged and other steps taken to interest and instruct the young who live in the vicinity. Year by year the number of readers and students increases, while the healthy influence exercised is evident. Support is sought for the maintenance of the work. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 24. Esther i.

IT has been suggested that this book is an extract from the official memoirs of the Persian court, which we know were carefully kept (ii. 23; vi. 1). This would account for the omission of the name of God, for the minuteness of the details, and for the numerous parentheses, which are interpolated for purposes of explanation. But the reverence and high tone of the historian seem to suggest that Mordecai himself, or some other pious Jew, was at this time the royal annalist. The fact of its being included in this Book, and being held by the Jews in the highest reverence, attests its divine authority.

Upon the whole, it seems probable that Xerxes, the invader of Greece, is the Ahasuerus of this book. He is known to have given himself up to unbridled personal indulgence. This story naturally follows those of Ezra and Nehemiah, for as they tell of God's preserving care of his people on their return to their own land, this describes his interposition on the behalf of the large numbers who remained in the land of their captivity. God is a refuge for the distressed, a refuge in times of trouble. He does not always show his hand. There is no speech, nor language, his voice is not heard, and yet He shows Himself strong on the behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards Him.

Take heart, oppressed believer, God is near, able to help, waiting to help—through dreams and wakeful nights, by the use of obscure and insignificant agencies; in his operation on the hearts of kings, if needs be, He is working on thy behalf. He will put down the mighty from their seats, and exalt them of low degree.

MONDAY, December 25. Esther ii.

"After these things" is an indefinite expression that may mark the interval, during which Xerxes invaded Greece and was ignominiously defeated. It almost appears that he was filled with compunction at the memory of his treatment of Vashti, and that his councillors made their horrible proposals with the view of diverting the royal mind from an inconsolable grief. How frequently men endeavour to drown their remorse by yielding to unbridled passion! This is the expedient of turning out demon by demon.

The name Mordecai means, "belonging to Merodach," the Babylonish deity, and was evidently a substitute for a Hebrew word, which indicated that this Jew, who was to become so famous, was dedicated to Jehovah. Hadassah means a "myrtle." This was the maiden's Hebrew, while Esther, "a star," was her Persian name. It was not left to the choice of Esther, or of her guardian, whether she should come to the palace with the rest. Had they had any option or choice, they would not have dreamt of such a degradation. The officials (v. 3) decided the matter for them, and against their determination there was no dispute. Had the Hebrew girl told her nationality, it might have barred her way to the throne; but it could not have saved her from the hands of the court officials.

That the maiden pleased the king's chamberlain, and ultimately the king, reminds us of Gen. xxxix. 21. "The Lord was with Joseph, and showed him mercy, and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison." The hand of the Lord was evidently with this lonely girl, through whom his high purposes were to be achieved; and it was of God that the king raised her to share his throne. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

TUESDAY, December 26. Esther iii.

A sturdy soul was Mordecai. He was not going to give a prostration of homage, which he reserved for God alone, to the haughty noble who sprang from the hated race of Amalek. Had not Jehovah vowed to have war with Amalek from generation to generation, and to put out the name of Amalek from under heaven?

He had to run a tremendous ordeal. The sycophants and hangers-on of the court "spake daily unto him." He was the butt of their sarcasm and jest. There was no suggestion too scurrilous, no taunt too biting, for them to use against him, knowing, as they did, that he differed from them by a whole heaven. There is nothing that aggravates the natural man like another's possession of a piety to which he can lay no claim. When Mordecai refused to budge an inch from his position, they called Haman's attention to his obduracy and nationality, sure that this last item would clench the nail. The Jew-hate has always brooded sullenly in the hearts of men.

The mines were carefully dug beneath the devoted people. All that malicious representation, appeals to avarice, and suspicions addressed to a despot's fears, could do, was done to secure the king's acquiescence to his favourite's plans. That two millions sterling would come into the royal treasuries was no small bait.

What a contrast within and without the palace when the decree was signed! Within, revelry, the king and Haman sat down to drink. Without, perplexity and alarm, for who could anticipate what the near future might disclose, if the king could sacrifice an entire nation for the whim of a favourite? But God was standing —within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

WEDNESDAY, December 27. Esther iv.

As no one guessed the relationship between Mordecai and Esther, Mordecai had to adopt some striking manner of attracting the Queen's attention: he did this by his loud and bitter cry. His artifice succeeded in putting him into communication with Esther; and he was able to acquaint her with the terrible fate which, like the sword of Damocles, was impending over her people and herself; and to urge her to act as an intercessor with the king.

What memorable words are those of vv. 13, 14, He was so sure that deliverance and enlargement would come, and so eager that his beloved ward should be the channel along which it might come. To all of us come these great moments, for which all our previous training and education have been preparing us.

The aloe is said to bloom once in a century; that one flower is the expression of the sun and moisture of a hundred years. Similarly lives bloom in single actions. See to it that you are ready, watching and praying, that you may be able to go forth and meet the supreme crisis and opportunity of your life whenever it arrives. Such moments always involve peril and trial, beneath which we are tempted to give in and turn back. But if we do so, we only expose ourselves to a more certain fate than if we persevere; whilst to another belongs the honour of becoming God's instrument and channel of deliverance.

THURSDAY, December 28. Esther v.

The intercession of Esther for her people has sometimes been quoted as a type of Christ's before the face of God for us, or of ours for others. But the parallel cannot be permitted for a moment, because the despotic, capricious, sensual monarch cannot, with the wildest stretch of imagination, stand for the nature of our Father God, who hates nothing that He has made, who yearns over us with tender pity, and whose character is the compendium of all that is noble and lovely.

Esther's address and prudence were the first instalment of God's answer to her prayers, and those of her maidens, who may have been Jewesses. The court of the palace, where the king was surrounded by his attendants, was not so suited for the disclosure of her purpose. And the double invitation, the postponement of the making of her request, greatly stimulated the king's curiosity, while it went to show that she was craving no ordinary boon.

That postponement of her request until the second banquet was evidently of God, working through a mind which was wholly subjected to his control. He put it into her heart, because on the intervening night an event took place which materially expedited Esther's plans. Nothing happens by chance. The royal sleeplessness is a link in the chain of Providence. Doubt not that God is hastening to thy help, and making all things work together for good.

FRIDAY, December 29. Esther vi.

Promotion cometh neither from the East or West, but from God. He putteth down one, and setteth up another. Ah, you Mordecais, to whom the waters of a bitter cup are wrung out, whose tears are your meat day and night, and who seem as the offscouring of all things, trodden beneath the iron heel of pride, be of good cheer; your time will come, when God shall lift up your head. Now you sit on the dunghill, then on the throne. Now the Miserere is on your lips, then the Jubilate. Now the fire and water, then the wealthy place. Lift up your hearts and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. The poor and needy are dear to God, and He will ride on the heavens to their help.

How strange that Haman should be called in to promote Mordecai's exaltation. Is not this, however, full of deep suggestiveness? Have not the calumny and hatred of the world been nonplussed in its attacks on the children of God, and even made the more to set forth the beauty of their holy characters? Again and again the fire and stake, the judgment-hall and torture-chamber, have been the background to bring out, in more evident relief, the graces which the Spirit of God has inwrought in holy souls. Pain and bereavement, like Haman, have often led us in triumph, and proclaimed in deed, if not in word, the excellence of the characters which have passed through their cleansing fires. Perhaps Satan himself shall contribute to the glory of our Lord, for whom the cross was prepared by his malice; and where sin abounded grace shall abound more exceedingly.

SATURDAY, December 30. Esther vii.

The whole of this story may be interpreted in its relation to the conflict within us, between the flesh and Spirit. This is one of the deep things of inspiration, that it has its direct historical value, and is capable of being applied to the deepest questions of the soul-life. There is the greater fitness in this application, since Amalek, from whom Haman sprang, always stands for the flesh. The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other.

It is quite clear that we are all holden by the flesh, which, in one form or another, hinders the manifestation of the Spirit, and there must be a moment when we enter deeply into the meaning of the Cross. And this applies not only to the inner question of character, but also to our work for God. In one way (I quote from a letter just received), it is so much easier to work than to pray; but, after all, the best work is done when there is least of our energetic, busy, self-life—that is, when we are on our knees. Those whom we try to drag along by virtue of our own endeavour for them, will only fall back; but when we stand aside and leave the Lord to do his work, helping Him in so far as He may call us in to help Him, and especially co-operating by prayer, work is done which remains for ever. Every moment we must reckon ourselves to be dead indeed to ourselves. It is only as Christ keeps the whole self-life in the place of death, only as we die to that wherein we were held—that is, the flesh, the old I—can we live by the faith of the Son of God.

There is a Nemesis in the world. Haman is hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai, and Mordecai and his people assume the supremacy anticipated by their foes.

Central Indian Aborigines.

SOBIT the Gond, with his wife Sukum, was among the first in the Balaghat district to hear the Gospel, but they took two years to consider the question of forsaking their ancestral beliefs and sinful lives before confessing Christ in baptism.

Bairagi, Sobit's brother-in-law, more speedily decided to make like profession of faith; but, alas, on the eve of the day fixed for the event, his numerous relatives and friends waited on him, and solemnly sat in conclave at his house, finishing up with such dire threats of vengeance that Bairagi lost heart and courage, and next day was not to be found; he has since been ashamed and wretched because of his backsliding, which makes us hope for and expect his restoration.

But more courageous were Juar Singh and Baksi, the Baigas, who were indeed sons of the forest, living on the game they killed, and the roots and berries they found in their jungle home. Almost at the first hearing they decided to follow Christ, and, braving all opposition and prognostications of some terrible catastrophe overtaking them, they boldly stepped into the flowing river, and were baptised into the name of God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

Jai Singh, of the same wild tribe, soon followed his friends, and with them became a brave witness for Christ. Jai Singh is the hero of more than one startling adventure with wild beasts, having at one time, when sleeping at dead of night in the forest, awaked to find his head grasped and held down to the earth by the massive paw of a big panther. His old mother beat off the beast with a heavy log of wood, but Jai Singh carried the scars for many days.

Such are incidents of life among the forest tribes inhabiting the hill country of Central India, among the two or three millions of whom a handful of missionaries are preaching the Gospel. The country is wild and inhospitable, railways and towns are scores of miles away, and luxuries are few; but the climate for the greater part of the year is good, and the people are simple, accessible, and lovable. Hinduism and other religions are steadily absorbing these hill tribes, and it is of most urgent necessity that those who remain in their ancestral faith be sought and won for Christ ere the glamour of idolatry be thrown over them. These forest tribes are

DEMON WORSHIPPERS.

The writer settled among the Gonds and Baigas of the Central Provinces in an unoccupied district some six years ago, and has had the joy of baptizing a number of them; and a healthy and vigorous Christian community now exists where then not a single Christian could be found. God's blessing has been upon the work, and helpers have been thrust forth, so that now there are six English and several native missionaries. A church has been organized, schools opened, and continuous evangelistic work carried on. The writer is now in England seeking to create interest and secure financial help for the prosecution of the work in this most promising field; funds are urgently needed for maintenance and extension. The most simple and inexpensive lines are followed in every department of the work, and the workers receive only what is necessary for the plainest mode of life consistent with the preservation of health.

Our field is, for the second time in four years, the scene of an entire failure of crop, and famine prevails on every hand. Thousands of our poor hill people are starving, in spite of the efforts of Government. We can find employment and food for many through our Industrial Farm and other agencies, if funds are forthcoming. The people come to us readily. I shall be very thankful to have opportunities for urging the claims of these forest tribes, wherever friends interested can furnish them, and also will gratefully receive financial assistance to the work.

Zambesi Industrial Mission.

MR. J. OSWALD, on his first visit to Angoniland, writing from Chioli, one of the Zambesi Industrial Mission stations in S. Angoniland, says:

"The schools and the meetings, both on the station and in the villages here, are surprising. On my first day's journey from Mitzidi I heard of eleven who were anxious to confess Christ in baptism. At Ntonda I saw the school, and counted ninety in two classes gathered outside, while inside were at least a dozen classes of about a score each. Others were writing and doing sums at the back of the school buildings. Some of the writing was very good.

"Last Sunday I saw some eighty black faces round the Lord's Table at Dumbole, some of whom were there for the first time. Every evening thirty or forty come in here for worship. I have counted as many as fifty. I am very thankful that I have been allowed to see the work here. I cannot forget that this is where Mr. Allan laboured and died without seeing much fruit. How true it is, "One soweth and another reapeth.'"

It will be a matter of interest to know that the coffee harvest has this year been most abundant. By the Ingeli, which has just arrived in London, 1,882 bags of coffee have been received, and the reports from the plantations mention that the trustees may expect in all something like 5,000 bags of coffee. This is cause for very great gratitude to the Bountiful Giver, who has blessed the work of the Mission in all its departments.

We are thankful to record that about £200 has been promised towards the total of £400 asked for by Mr. Caldwell for the establishment of a church and sailors' rest at Chinde. We hope to have the whole amount in hand by January.

From a cable just received we learn that seven fresh workers are required for the Mission, and that Mr. Caldwell is leaving for home. Christian men who feel that God has called them for service in Central Africa, being thoroughly capable, and having a good knowledge of nursery work or farming, are requested to apply to the Secretary of the Mission at this address:—1, Gresham Street, London, E.C.

St. John's College (C.M.S.), Agra.

"THE function of Christian colleges is to make it perfectly clear that the best mind is bound to be a Christian mind."

So said the Hon. Kali Charan Banerji in a speech at the Bombay Missionary Conference in 1892. There is a great truth in this, for in India and the East, where Oriental culture, and the pursuit of that philosopher's stone—occult science—is at its zenith, where the best and noblest of the native non-Christian intellects are permeated with the sophistry of Buddhism, Christianity must needs be presented to them from its highest intellectual as well as its moral aspect. St. John's College is an institution which has this for its primary object, and one has only to glance at the latest prospectus and report to see how the work is being carried out.

Here native students can graduate in the faculties of arts, law, science, medicine, &c., the college being affiliated to the Universities of Allahabad and Calcutta. The Bible is taught throughout the whole institution, including the branch schools. Rev. J. P. Haythornthwaite, M.A., the Principal, who has been on furlough in England, sailed the other day, and is now on his way back to Agra. St. John's College is a centre of much Christian activity, moral as well as intellectual and spiritual, and its influence in India is far-reaching, and is yearly increasing.

Australian Notes.

A SUCCESSFUL mission, by Rev. C. H. Yatman, from America, has just concluded in Geelong, Victoria. The attendances have not been so large as he has had in most cities in the Colonies. Yet the interest steadily grew, and considerably more than 100 persons must have come forward for covenant cards.

Mr. Yatman is a powerful and original speaker, with methods entirely his own. His professed aim in a mission is "to make bad people good, and good people better;" and his appeal to men is based upon the desire "to be good," which he believes is in every man's heart. Through the whole mission there has been no inquiry room, or any special attempt to get workers into personal contact with inquirers.

I am writing on Melbourne Cup Day, which, in spite of the protest of the non-racing community, is proclaimed a public holiday. The Government patronage of this race meeting, with the numerous evils connected with it, is a great curse to the colony.

Yet this is not the only matter that at present causes humiliation to Christian people. The other week the Victorian contingent was sent off to help our soldiers in South Africa, and though there was time for processions, receptions, banquets, and entertainments, there was no time for any religious service!

An incident that took place on the wharf will show how such a service would have been appreciated. A young man was receiving his last goodbye from his mother and sister, and when at last he was obliged to cross the gangway the sister fell down on her knees among the crowd and fervently prayed for him. Another soldier passing at the time stopped at the sight, and saluted as he saw her kneeling there.

I am now happily settled in the Fenwick Street Baptist Church in this city.

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

THOSE of your readers who are interested in the work of the Nyassa Industrial Mission, and especially in the labours of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Deeath at Cholo, will be glad to hear that God is blessing the patient toil of the workers in the field. While a marked spirit of hearing prevails among the natives, the industrial work has been so successful that the two plantations already occupied may now be regarded as self-supporting; and it is contemplated, so soon as funds for the purpose are in hand, to open new mission stations in districts hitherto altogether unevangelized.

The present letter is written, not to solicit funds, but in the hope that there may be among your readers some who are already in a measure familiar with the working of an industrial mission plantation, and who, seeing this appeal, may recognise in it the voice of God calling them to this service for Him. Our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Hambrook, have recently been compelled to return home, and consequently our stations are undermanned just when an increase of workers is needed instead of a diminution. We are thankful that we have young men training or offering for the work, whom we shall be glad to send out soon; but our immediate need just now is a man of some experience in agricultural or mercantile undertakings, and whose heart is burning with the love of Christ, and the love of souls.

We believe that God has such a man ready for us somewhere—one who is willing to endure hardness for Christ's sake; and trust that this letter may be the means of bringing us into communication with him. I shall be happy to give such a one full information.

On the Black Sea.

FRAULEIN BECHLER, formerly an English governess, but now working for the Lord at Constantza, on the Black Sea, writes:—"It may be known only to few that the Lord is making for Himself an entrance into Roumania. The work, though just beginning, is spreading. Five years ago some Stundist brethren from Russia, who had suffered greatly from oppression, settled hereabouts. One, who had been for some time the companion of Dr. Baedeker on his travels, came to Constantza, which is a seaport in direct communication with the Orient, and at which the Orient Express stops three times a week. He quietly began work for the Lord, and souls who were hungering for the Word of God soon combined for worship. Through Dr. Baedeker's kind help they were enabled to open a mission hall, in which Sunday-school classes and meetings for grown-up people are now held every Sunday, both in Armenian and German. Meetings in Russian are also held in the house of one of the brethren.

"There are representatives of many nations living side by side in Constantza, and it is greatly to be desired that all should hear the Gospel. There is but what has been done, so far, is like a drop in the ocean. There is a lack of workers and also of means.

"What gives a special importance to Roumania is that there are comparatively more Jews in the country than in any other country of Europe. The official census shows that 350,000 of the 5,000,000 of inhabitants in Roumania are Jews, for whom nothing worth speaking of has yet been done. The Zionist movement is strong among them. Were these Jews to be evangelized, blessing would result to them and to the whole country. For the Roumanians, too, little has been done so far. Besides the distribution of Holy Scripture through the British and Foreign Bible Society, nothing worth mentioning has been done.

"Lately, the Stundist brethren have begun to print and distribute Roumanian tracts. The people gladly accept them; but here, too, there there is a lack of means. To supply all, we should need Scripture portions and tracts in which makes work more expensive than in a country where all can speak and read the same language. But there are no funds for buying Scriptures, so we cannot do so much as we should like. An English brother made known the needs of Roumania a year ago, with the result that four missionaries came to Bucharest, the capital. This was last August. They were sent in prayer by some Christians in French Switzerland, by whom they are also supported.

"The Stundists found themselves obliged, two years ago, to open a Christian school for their children; but many other children are also enjoying it. The school began with thirty children; now we have eighty-six, with four teachers. However hard the work in this school (there being seven different nationalities and tongues represented), one cannot help seeing that it has not been in vain. After two years' schooling they can understand the Word of God all in one common language. The greater part of the children at the school are Armenians from Turkey. In connection with this school there is in Constantza a little for Stundist children. The father and mother of this Home are Stundists, who had to suffer great persecutions and endure exile for their faith and principles. None of these efforts are in connection with any missionary society, and we have no definite income to depend on. To the glory of the Lord, it must be said that, as long as the work has existed, we have not been in want, though again and again the oil in the cruse and the meal in the barrel have been low.

"It greatly cheers us to add that recently one of the Stundist brethren has opened a little Bible and tract depôt; which is all the more hopeful and welcome, as this brother has made it his aim to supply the various nationalities at Constantza with the Gospel in their own language. Any Christian friends who like to help in the work should write to Dr. Baedeker, at Weston-super-Mare; or direct to Patwakan Taraianz, Str. Militara, 30, Constantza, Roumania. The latter is also in direct communication with the oppressed in Russia, and would gladly forward any help sent for them."

A Brahmin Baptized.

MR. JAI BHAI, of the Indian Christian Realm Mission, write concerning a station that he recently visited:

A good piece of news is just in from Jumna Prasad. He has baptized in the river the headman of Jantana, a Bheel village some seven miles from Broach. Mr. Stover and another Dunker missionary were present." A number of the heathen come down to witness the baptism.

Brother Jumna Prasad is a man of the Brahmin caste who, from early conversion and training, is specially fitted for missionary work among his countrymen. God has used him and his wife of late, particularly among the Bheels. Brother Stover is a pastor of the German Baptists, a people doing a quiet, earnest work in India. Will friends pray that the head man just baptized may be enabled to witness a good confession by his daily life before his people, and that he may learn and be used of God?

Mr. Jai Bhai, the director of the Mission, has been down with an attack of typhoid, caught while on tour. He is being brought through. The above note is his first to England since his sickness. ESU CHURRAN.

"News from Barotsi Land."

THE current issue of the magazine associated with the Mission to the Barotsis contains some reassuring reports from the Upper Zambesi district. Letters from the capital show that, outwardly, real progress is being made, although conversions are few, and the soil is still very hard. Mr. and Mrs. Mann, who are engaged at Lealuyi, Barotsi Valley, state that their labours at this station are bearing much fruit, and many souls are being added to the Church of Christ.

The congregations in the morning average 450 people, and in the afternoon 200. King Lewanika is frequently amongst the worshippers. Many of the natives here are suffering from leprosy, and it is proposed to build a hospital, when funds will allow.

At Lealuyi there is an evangelists' school, where the scholars are taught the English language; but much difficulty has been occasioned by the scarcity of books. Many will, doubtless, be glad to help the students by forwarding spare books to the hon. secretary, Miss C. W. Mackintosh, 4, Wetherby Gardens, S.W., who also will give any information relating to the Mission.

Tunis.—Mr. Arthur V. Liley, 10, Rue de la Medressa, Es Slimania, has, from time to time, kept the friends of the Mission at Tunis well informed as to the progress of the work out there. A recent communication bears on Mohammedan religious beliefs. "As usual," says Mr. Liley, "I have had many Arabs coming to the house, brought by various motives. The opportunity has always been seized to point them to Jesus, as the Son of God, and the only Saviour. An important development of the mission station is the provision made for the Arabs by the opening of a shop, where they may come for reading and conversation, and to purchase the Scriptures."

Blood Reserve.—This is a centre of mission work in the Diocese of Calgary, N.W. Canada, till recently carried on by Rev. F. Swainson, of the C.M.S. The Kissock Homes for Indian children stand for the Evangelical faith against Roman Catholic aggression boldly conducted. The Canadian Government makes a grant towards the support of each Indian child in residence, but it is a matter of regret to know that, while all the expenses of a local Roman Catholic school are met by the Government, only a small sum was given by Government towards the erection of the Kissock Homes and Hospital. Copies of the appeal, with statement of funds raised, and further information, can be had of Rev. F. Swainson, 171, Sutherland Road, Sheffield.

A Sunday in Moosonee.

THE "great lone land" of North-West Canada is steadily yielding to the influence of the Gospel. The diocese of Moosonee has been for some years in charge of Bishop Newnham, who has laboured earnestly to undermine and displace the idolatry and superstition of the Indians; and, with the blessing of God upon his word and work, the prejudices of the people against the truths which attack their besetting sins have been in a large degree overcome.

With regard to the observance of the Sabbath by the inhabitants, the Bishop writes: "There are still parts where the missionary and his message have not penetrated, and which are without a Sunday. In a few remote districts, far from our mission centres, and in the bleak, barren, barbarous tracts in the far north, where the poor, dirty, and ignorant, but happy and contented Eskimo wander in their search for seals and reindeer, rarely or never coming within sound of the missionary's voice—there, of course, Sunday is as any other day. But, in general, one of the first evidences that an Indian or Eskimo has begun to understand and accept the elements of the Christian religion is that he begins to observe the day in some way. Few of the Indians travel on Sundays, except under special circumstances. The missionaries themselves are sometimes forced to travel on that day in the fulfilment of their offices, as in all our 600,000 square miles there are only some twelve or fourteen churches, some ten missionaries, with a few native catechists."

In the home, which is usually a tent, Sunday is not disregarded. "After breakfast," says the Bishop, "the old man goes to his bag to get out his books—New Testament, Prayer-book, and hymn-book. One or two others get out theirs, and then they probably sit on their heels round the tent. The old man gives out the hymn, 'Awake my soul,' the words, though Indian, being the same, and ending with 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.' How well they sing! All join in, even the children, for the Indian loves to sing, and the children know most of the hymn-book by heart. The old man now begins to read, and if you could follow, you would find he is going through the morning service of the English Prayer-book. Now they kneel forward, and join in the General Confession and Lord's Prayer. Then follow the Psalms for the day. They have their almanacks marked and given them by the missionaries."

The remainder of the service is equally hearty, and the sermon is a simple, earnest exhortation to Christian faith and service, with homely, practical details of duties, and personal experience. In the forests, of course, and many other places where the inhabitants are far removed from spiritual influences and religious surroundings—where there are none to encourage them in due observance of the day—Sunday is observed in a different manner; but even in such regions there are evidences of blessing and enlightenment to the heathen, resulting from occasional visits on the part of the missionaries.

Wei-hai-wei.—At this far-away station Mr. and Mrs. Mudditt are continuing their good work at the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, which they have started. Refreshments are sold at low prices, and, in a room set apart for meetings, a variety of Gospel services are held. Good reading matter is asked for, which may be addressed to Mr. Mudditt, at the Institute, Wei-hai-wei, China.

Captain Dreyfus.—It is interesting to know that the many Bibles sent to Captain Dreyfus, some of them from English sources, are receiving a certain amount of attention. This may stimulate those interested in this remarkable man to pray that he may come to know the Messiah, who "came unto his own, but his own received Him not;" also that he may become an instrument in proclaiming Christ to his nation, a mission for which the terrible sufferings he had endured seem to have specially fitted him. A visitor to the Captain not long ago saw on the table Bibles in which solicitous friends had underlined those passages which seemed to apply to the Captain's case. Others, at the request of Madame Dreyfus, had copied extracts from the Scriptures which she finds particularly touching.

A Lonely Field in India.

THE Kois and Gonds live among the hills and in remote places, far away from railway communication. This makes it difficult to reach them, as the only means of travel is by cart over very rough roads. Nevertheless, they are in need of the Gospel, and should not be neglected. I have had the pleasure of travelling through a part of the country with my two native preachers, and of preaching to people that never heard the Gospel before. Many of them were surprised at what they heard, and asked all manner of questions. One man said, "If what you say is true, then we are great sinners. I fear that we cannot enter heaven." We told them of Jesus the Saviour of mankind. They listened attentively, eager to catch every word that fell from the speaker's lips.

In one village more than 200 gathered to hear the message of love. This is a large number of Kois to get together, as the villages are small and scattered. The question now is, what can we do to extend the work among these people? They are poor and ignorant, yet in a sense they are better off than many other tribes, as they live among the hills, and can always cultivate some kind of crop. Even in famine time they can eke out an existence by wild forest produce. They are now open for the Gospel.

Living in the district is expensive for Europeans, because of the difficulty in getting supplies over the bad roads. Even our mail has to be carried 158 miles by coolies from Warora to Sironcha. We are entirely cut off from civilization; but we are here for Jesus' sake, and to do his work. And now that the crops have failed in this part of the Godavery Valley, the situation is more than ever difficult. But our trust is in God, as we toil in our lonely field. Should any society or person feel interested in the aborigines of this land, I shall be pleased to hear from them.

Miss Leigh's Homes in Paris.

THE work of the British and American Mission Homes has during the past year, in the uncertain atmosphere of Paris, been carried on in "troublous times." No part of the work has, however, been either interrupted or curtailed, and none has been abandoned. The reports handed in to the Paris Council by those in charge of the various institutions are all written in a tone of thankfulness and hope.

The "mother" institution, at 77, Avenue Wagram, is the centre of varied operations. The Orphanage continues prosperous, and grows yearly in the confidence of the public. Washington House occupies a unique position in Paris, and is almost regarded as indispensable. That it is widely known and highly appreciated is evident from the fact that the admissions during the past year reached the large number of 305, comprising art students and governesses, trained nurses and teachers, while for those engaged in business special arrangements are made.

The directors are appealing for the sum still required—£600—to bring the annual income up to £3,000, and also for £200 to meet a heavy bill for compulsory drainage and exterior renovation required by French law. Copies of the report for the past year may be had from the Hon. Sec., Mrs. Travers Lewis, 45, Eastbourne Terrace, W.

Destitute Children in Korea.

IN some account of her Home for Destitute Children in Korea, sent to a friend in England, Miss Perry writes:—"Is it not wonderful that we should have such a lovely place given us for a home? Last year we sent out circulars, saying we wanted a large place in a healthy situation outside the city walls. Now we have that place—a nice Korean house, with extensive garden and fields—just what we desired. I want to take in a large number of children this year, but funds have come in very slowly.

"Seoul is a very large city, the residence of the Emperor, and the centre of all mission work in the country. It is surrounded by a high and picturesque wall, with large gates, which have heavy roofs, and generally a room above the gate for watchmen. The gates are open all day, and closed at night. The country around is very beautiful, the foliage very luxuriant, when the Koreans do not cut it for firewood. Our garden has been one succession of blossom since the spring. The ground we have is six or seven acres, in a pretty hollow half-way up a mountain, which slopes gradually down to a thickly-populated district, just outside the west gate of the city.

"The little girls are very lively and affectionate. They can learn very easily, and think nothing of committing to memory half a chapter in the morning, God is blessing us here wonderfully. I feel that it is not according to our faith, but according to his goodness, far more than we can either ask or think."

Among Jews in Hamburg.

SINCE last January, more than eighty Jewish young men have spent a longer or shorter time in our home. Since August, four confessed the Saviour in baptism, and all four are again earning their own living. Now two are again preparing for baptism, and several have found the Saviour, although they have not yet the courage to confess Him openly.

On October 8, the son of a Jewish Rabbi was baptized, and although, in his case, confessing the Saviour meant losing all, he did not hesitate. Since then he has received the sad news of his father's death. The Lord is leading him through deep waters, but is keeping him in perfect peace. I am asking for earnest prayer on behalf of all young converts, fifteen in all, since Easter, 1898.

I am very anxious to prepare our young men a Christmas Joy. Often, though not always, they come to us without any extra clothing. I should be so grateful if friends would look through their wardrobes, and see if they can send any cast-off clothes, underclothing, overcoats, &c. Our office (16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.) would gladly forward them; also any of the Continental carriers.

The Lord has laid it on my heart to carry on, this winter, an active evangelistic propaganda with the magic lantern. In Germany, this method has still the advantage of novelty. Through the kindness of a friend, I have a good lantern, but I have no slides. I should be grateful if friends, who have spare slides suitable for evangelistic purposes, would kindly forward them to me. Three times daily instruction is given to classes of Jewish young men, who, in addition, work seven hours a day in our nursery and vegetable gardens.

Anything which would make our lessons more interesting, or would serve to illustrate Scriptural teaching, also notes of the recent Bible schools held in London, or books which we might use in our instructions, would be a great help to our work.

Among Roman Poor.

MRS. WALL sends particulars of her work among the poor in Rome. Needless to say, all efforts to spread the simple Gospel meet with determined opposition. The following are incidents of the silent progress of the work of evangelization:—

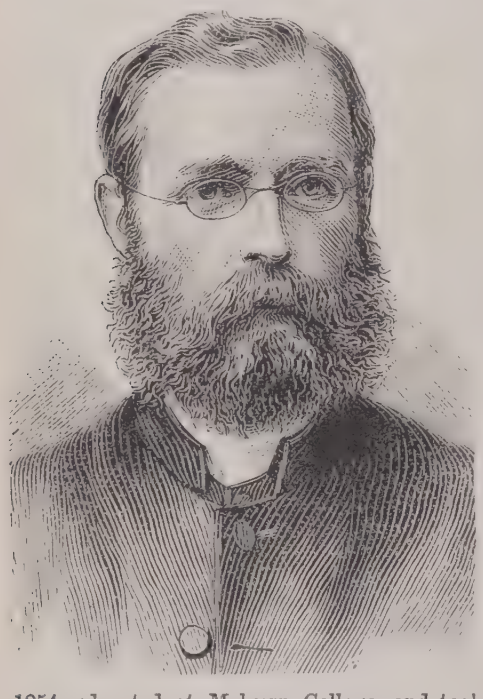
One poor woman, very rough and ignorant, who has attended the Sunday-school and meetings for about six years, has to bear scorn and harsh treatment from friends on account of her faith in Christ. Old and needy, her children have treated her badly, and often turned her out of the house. Long desirous of doing something for Christ, she one day spoke about Him to a neighbour, who listened intently, with the result that she also became a Christian, leaving Rome for her village, carrying with her a New Testament.

Another poor woman, named Casali, during many months in the hospital, suffered much persecution from priests and nuns. It is impossible to realize what discomforts and ill-treatment the Romanists inflict on the Protestant poor when they have them in their power. When this poor woman was in extremis, they endeavoured to force her to confess. She cried out, "I have confessed all to Jesus, and his blood has washed away my sins." The priests and nuns then left her, and forbade anyone to go near, on pain of excommunication; and, lest her testimony should influence others, they told other patients in the ward that as the heretic had not repented she would assuredly go to hell. The poor soul breathed her last without any human word of comfort. These facts were related by one of the nurses in the ward, who was much impressed by what she witnessed.

There is also a crèche, where little children are taught to pray to Jesus. Many of them become little missionaries in their homes. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Wall, 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome. We heartily commend her arduous and excellent work.

Work in Salonica.

THE station of the American Board of Missions, under Dr. J. Henry House, is doing a splendid work, not only among the Christian sailors of the English squadrons when in the harbour of Salonica, but among the natives and inhabitants of this cosmopolitan city. On October 9, Dr. House invited the Christian men of the squadron of some twenty ships then in harbour to a united meeting at the Mission-house, and the Admiral signalled the invitation to all his ships. But the accommodation and facilities for housing are very limited, and there is no sleeping accommodation. It went to the missionaries' hearts to have to tell these men, who had only twenty-four hours' shore leave, about beds in the khans and hotels. The men were served with tea, though only fifty could be seated at once.



The men would gladly have availed themselves of a temperance Christian "Rest;" but the only place in this ancient scene of St. Paul's labours bearing the name of a "Rest" is a dram-shop! Gifts of books and other articles would be very welcome at this distant outpost of missionary labour; and a large portion of the Mission-house needs furnishing. A library of Bulgarian and other books has been started, and a sick-room is being maintained.

Rev. E. O. Williams,

MISSIONARY TO CHINA.

WE recently recorded the death of Rev. E. O. Williams, missionary to China, "a man greatly beloved." Measured by years, his life was brief. He was but forty-five when his home-call came. But according to the heavenly standard it was a full life, for from beginning to end it was given to God, and aglow with sacred light and love.

Edward Osborne Williams was the seventh son of Mr. Philip Penry Williams, J.P., of Stoke House, Shropshire. He was born in 1854, educated at Malvern College, and took third-class Theological honours at Trinity College, Oxford, in 1876. Ordained in 1878 by the Bishop of Ripon, he laboured as curate of Ilkley, Yorkshire, from 1878-81, when he was presented to the living of St. Stephen's, Burmantofts, Leeds. This was his sphere of toil for seven years, with much appreciation and success.

During this period—while vicar of Burmantofts—he experienced a notable deepening of spiritual experience. He attended conventions at Keswick and Glasgow in 1885-6, and while his ministry became more intense, he felt promptings to a wider service. In 1887 the missionary call came to him and his young wife simultaneously, through the message and influence of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, the director of the China Inland Mission.

Gladly obeying, they started, with their four little boys, on the long voyage to Paoning, in the province of Szchuen, in the very heart of China. In 1894 they moved to Sin-tien-tsï, and afterwards to Pacheo, both places in the same province. They had only returned to Pacheo six weeks, after a furlough in England, and at Shanghai of two years, when he was called to the higher service above. He passed away on June 30 last, after only eight days' illness, from typhoid fever.

As a young man, in 1877, Mr. Williams rendered welcome assistance to Rev. Gilbert Karney, then vicar of Sandown, Isle of Wight. He went about among the people in the mission district of Lake, and by his bright and winning manner exercised an influence which was blessed to many, old and young alike. In the words of Mr. Karney: "His outward happiness was the reflection of his inward holiness. His life was beautifully consistent."

Writing of his college days, Canon Christopher says: "I remember him as a truly Christian undergraduate here in Oxford. He was, indeed, a worthy brother of the late Captain Williams, R.N., who laboured so faithfully and zealously as the Missionary Secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society." His vicar when at Ilkley, Rev. A. C. Downer, recalls with pleasure the days when Mr. Williams assisted him in parish work. "From first to last he was kind and unselfish. The work was not easy, but he gave invaluable help in everything."

Mr. Williams was a self-effacing worker, and was as a right hand to Bishop Cassels in his arduous toils in dark China. Among workers of the C.I.M. his name is held in affectionate remembrance. Mr. W. B. Sloan, secretary of the Mission, writing after his departure, asks, "What was the secret of its influence? Three words seem to sum it up, simplicity, humility, kindliness. Walking always before God, there was a note of genuine ruthfulness about his character, which became manifest in all that he said and did. He esteemed others better than himself, but he never hesitated to embrace the opportunities of service that were presented to him."

The ministry of such a man, though neither showy nor striking, cannot fail to leave solid and lasting results, far more than are visible here and now.

Notes from New York.

ADELINE, Countess Schimmelmann, has arrived here from Chicago and Detroit, where she has been engaged in religious and philanthropic work among the poor. She has come here by way of the Great Lakes and the Erie Canal in her yacht Duen, and expects to stay some little time. She reckons that she has fed more than 50,000 poor people since she reached this country.

A Cleveland despatch gives the following account of President McKinley's conversion when a boy, as narrated by a gentleman who was at that time a circuit rider in the Methodist Church:—"President McKinley was converted at a prayer meeting. I remember the evening very well. At my request for those to stand who wished to express a desire to become Christians, he rose. I remember his words very well. He said: 'God is the greatest of all things, and religion is the best of all things in the world. I have determined, by the grace of God, to seek for it until I find it.' After his declaration he attended the revival meetings for three or four evenings. At the expiration of that time he said that he found relief and joy in religion. He continued to be much interested in the meetings, and he was very attentive at the services. He pursued a strict study of religion and religious duties. There was only one religious question which troubled the young man. He was puzzled as to whether he should be baptized by sprinkling or immersion. Both could then be used in the Methodist Church. In a few months, however, he decided to be immersed with a number of others, and, having been on probation in the interval, he then became a member of the Church."

At the opening of the fifty-sixth Congress of the United States, Brigham H. Roberts, an avowed polygamist, attempted to take his seat as a representative of the State of Utah. For many weeks efforts have been in progress to create such a public sentiment as should render it impossible for any member of the House to countenance the presence of a polygamist. The New York Journal procured petitions from all parts of the land, bearing no fewer than seven millions of names, or nearly ten per cent. of the entire population. Previous to the assembling of Congress, Roberts had, among other devices, tried to make his case a matter of politics; but his efforts to rally the Democrats to his side completely failed. Mr. Tayler, of Ohio, a Republican, protested against Roberts's admission to the House, and he was promptly sustained by Mr. McRae, of Arkansas, a prominent Democrat. Mr. Tayler presented the huge 7,000,000 signature petition to the House. Mr. Roberts stood aside while the other members were sworn in. The facts as to his ineligibility will be investigated before a committee, which will in due course report to the House.

Dr. De Costa, who was rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist for eighteen years, has joined the Roman Catholic Church. The point of interest in his action lies in the fact that the chief element in the case is that he holds that Church to be the only existing body that can be relied upon for the defence of the Bible in its entirety and integrity. He took a prominent part in the controversy over the ordination of Dr. Briggs a few months ago, even going so far as to threaten to have Bishop Potter tried before an ecclesiastical court if he performed that ceremony. He did not do so, however, and in September he resigned his rectorate. As he is married, he is ineligible for the Catholic priesthood, and he intends to devote himself to lecturing and literature.

Count Campello's Work in Rome.

A REMARKABLE meeting took place in Rome last week, when a gathering of Italian and other friends of the movement for reform in the Roman Catholic Church in Italy was held at Via Farina, where a hall at House A had been hired and arranged as a church, through the exertions of the Roman friends of the cause. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Count Campello, who afterwards asked the English chaplain of Holy Trinity Church, who was present, to join him in asking the Divine blessing on the work.

The meeting called upon Count Campello to preside and to address the assembly. In doing so, he congratulated the gathering on the fair promise of a Roman branch of the work which had already taken shape under his care, and that of the band of clergy which were working under his instructions, and in connection with the synod of the Chiesa Cattolica Italiana Riformata, which had elected him its Bishop. He then referred to the efforts made upwards of twelve years ago to open a hall for worship in Rome by Monsignore S—— and himself. Monsignore S——, chilled from the want of practical support from those who assured him of their "warm sympathies," had withdrawn from the movement, and had left him, Count Campello, to carry out alone the work he had since done. In great measure this was through the kind aid of the Italian Church Reform Association, at Church House, Westminster, by which he had been enabled to found churches and open stations, and establish trained ministers and teachers at Oneglia, San Remo, Arrone, San Vito, St. Angelo di Lombardi, Dovadalo, Popino, &c. Count Campello, who resides at Arrone, has appointed Rev. A. Luzzi to live in Rome and take oversight of the work.

Manuel Matamoros's Mother.

MANY of our readers will recall with interest a notice of Manuel Matamoros which appeared in our issue for the 16th ult. We feel sure it will be of equal interest to them to see a portrait of his mother, the heroic old lady for whose necessities appeal has been made. She is over ninety-seven years of age, and is dependent entirely upon the help of Christians.

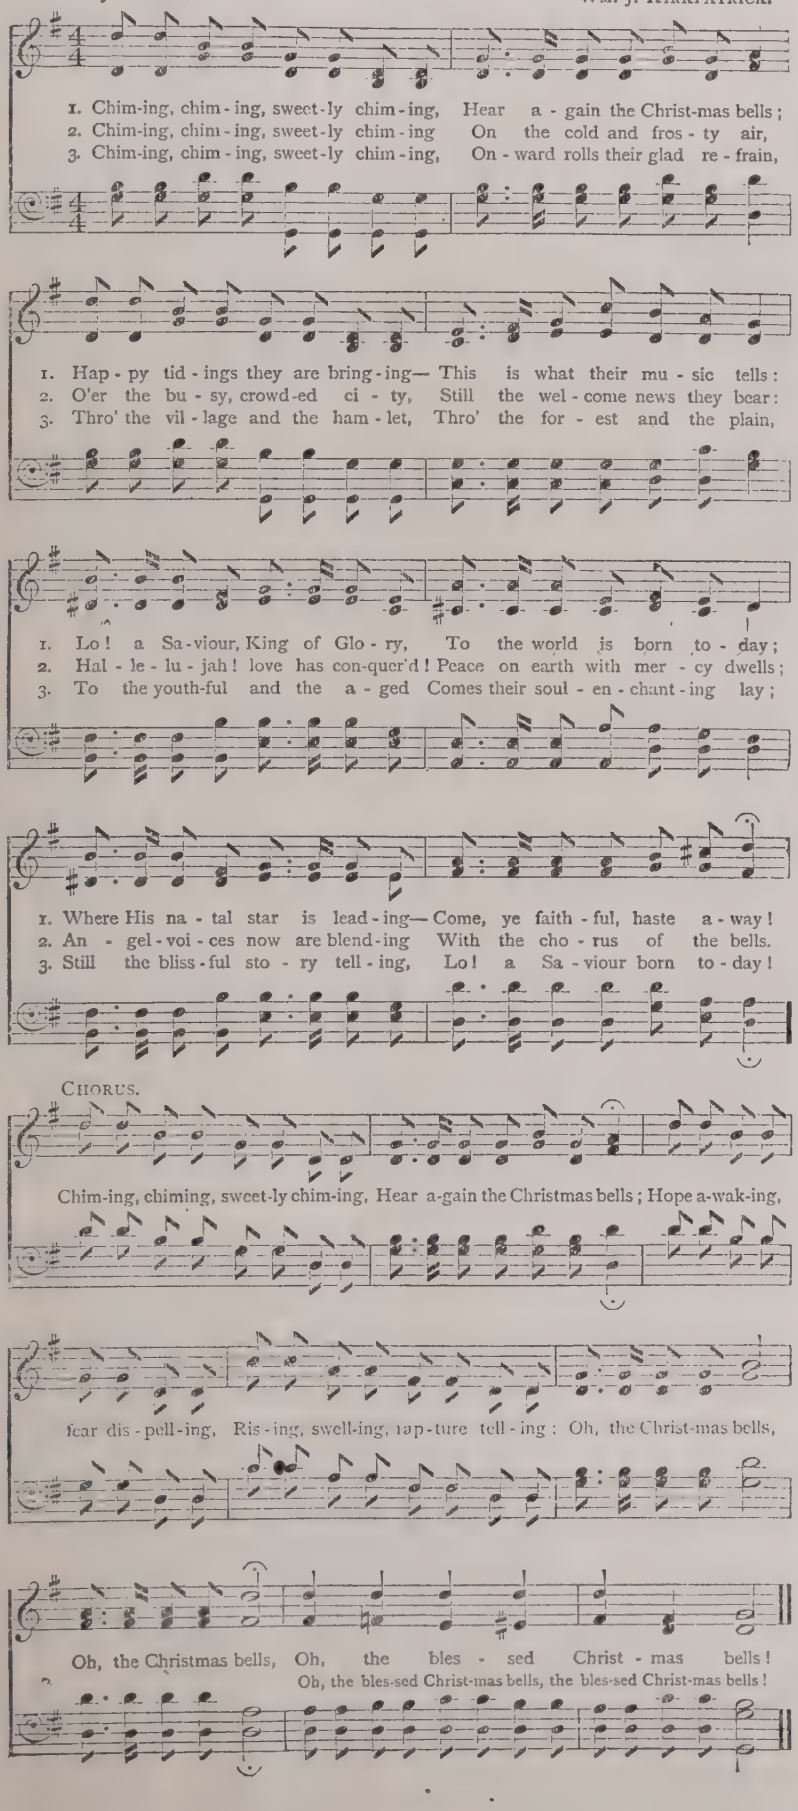
The Dona Dolores resembled her son both in appearance and character; and, at the time of his persecution, removed to Granada in order to visit him in prison. On one occasion the governor of the prison, seeing her weeping by her son's bedside, said:

"You are weeping, madam?"

"How can I do otherwise?" she replied.

"If your son," replied the governor, "was not as bad a son as he is to his mother, the Church of Rome, it would be easy for him to dry your tears."

To this Dona Dolores replied: "If my son were to deny his Saviour Jesus Christ, I, in my turn, would deny him as my son."



The governor, much surprised, turned to Matamoros and said, "You have a noble mother."

Christmas Poems.

"On Earth, Peace."

(Luke ii. 14.)

"PEACE! Peace!" poor stricken earth hath heard
The heavenly, unaccustomed word!
The pulses of her heart are stirred.
Not yet she knows his gentle reign,
Not yet the end of strife and pain:
She waits till Jesus comes again.
Yet all who to his sceptre bow
Enjoy the blessed earnest now—
The peace of God on lip and brow.

Christmas Bells.

RING out, ye bells! ring merrily
A joyous peal o'er land and sea;
Glad tidings of a Saviour's birth,
Sweet echoes of goodwill to earth.

Ring out, ye bells! O loudly ring
Till all the world re-echoing,
Unite to praise eternal love,
Which brought the Saviour from above.

Ring on, ye bells! but soft and low,
Whisper to those bow'd down with woe,
For many lonely hearts will weep,
And many weary vigils keep.

Ring softly still, and tell them He,
The Lord of air, and earth, and sea,
Came but to suffer, and to know
The deepest depths of human woe.

Let silvery tones now o'er them steal,
And to their heart his love reveal
Divinely true unto the end,
Compassionate, unchanging Friend.

Ring on, ring on, and never cease,
Till o'er the earth is perfect peace;
Till we are called to praise above
The wonders of redeeming love.

"The Word made Flesh."

LORD, in wondering contemplation,
We commemorate thy birth:
Thy mysterious Incarnation
In the form of sons of earth.
Heaven with loudest praise resounded
At thy condescending grace,
When Thou didst, with love unbounded,
Come to our apostate race.

Low before thy throne adoring,
God Incarnate, Saviour, King,
We, our lukewarm love deploring,
Heartfelt praise and blessing bring.
Thou, the brightness of his glory,
Didst the Father's love declare,
And unfold the blissful story
Of the gift He did not spare!

Of our flesh and blood partaking,
Thou hast suffered human grief;
Thou canst soothe the heart's sad aching
To the weary give relief:
In each trouble and temptation
That our faith and patience tries,
Thou canst give sweet consolation,
And canst truly sympathize.

But thy wondrous Incarnation
Could not, by itself alone
Bring us pardon and salvation,
Nor for all our guilt atone:
Thou hast blotted out transgression
By thy blood on Calvary shed,
Thus releasing from oppression
Those by Satan captive led.

Lord, our Light and our Salvation,
Evermore be Thou our Guide!
Make our hearts thy habitation,
Let us e'er in Thee abide!
Thy most precious Name confessing,
May we tell to all around
What forgiveness, joy, and blessing
In our Saviour we have found!

Where Will Jesus Spend Christmas?

Where will Jesus spend Christmas?
With her of the lonely room,
With visitors few,
One Visitor true,
Will draw the curtains of gloom:
And her face will grow bright
In the heavenly light
Of Him whose presence gives songs in the night.

Where will Jesus spend Christmas?
Where father and mother smile,
And fair children play
Through the short, happy day,
Remembering Jesus the while.
It will double the glee,
O Lord, if they see
Thy face, as they gather at thy blessed knee.

Where will Jesus spend Christmas?
Away in the heathen land,
Where loving hearts tell
Of the Lord they know well,
Though few the glad news understand.
As their hearts hurry back
O'er the homeward track,
The Master's presence will make up all lack.

Where will Jesus spend Christmas?
With some by the new-made grave:
With some on the sea,
As of old He would be,
The God of the bold and the brave:
With the sinner who sighs,
And for love's pardon cries:
With the sick—with the one that at Christmas dies.

Where will Jesus spend Christmas?
With any who will invite;
Though lowly the board,
The Bethlehem Lord
Will bring to the lowly delight.
And, perhaps, ere again
Christmas comes with its train,
We shall be with Him where joys ever remain

William Luff.

The Holy Child.

"A Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii. 11).

Shall darkness reign when Love alights
Within the earth's confines?
Shall gloom prevail to cloud the skies
When peerless glory shines?
Heaven wills it otherwise; and, lo!
Angelic voices tell
In rapturous song, "The Christ is born,
The Lord, Immanuel!"

Earth's destined Monarch! there He lies,
His bed—the manger rude!
Draw near, and with the heart adore
The holy One of God—
The Babe, unknown to wealth and power,
To shepherds first displayed,
Immortal Love in creature form,
In human likeness made.

Long ages roll; yet, through them all
The light of Bethlehem shines;
That Child the wondrous centre is
Of all heaven's vast designs;
'Till, veiled no more, his glory beams,
And low! before Him fall
Earth's myriads, as in holy song
They crown Him "Lord of All!"

Albert Midlane.

A Christmas Hymn.

Hail to Thee, O Holy Jesus!
Hail to Thee, eternal King!
Hail to Thee, who as an Infant
Came into this world of sin!

In the rude and lowly manger,
On thy blessed Mother's arm,
Thou didst know an infant's weakness—
Thou didst feel a child's alarm.

For in weakness, not in power,
Laying heavenly glory by,
Thou, in poverty, not riches,
Came to suffer and to die.

Oh! stupendous love, surpassing
All that we can know or feel,
Reverently we gaze, adoring,
At the love Thou dost reveal.

Praise to Thee, whom angels worship;
Praise to Thee, whom hosts adore;
Praise to Thee, Oh! glorious Godhead—
Three in One, God evermore.

A Prayer for Peace.

Christmas, dear old Christmas, thou art coming once again,
Upon the night winds stealing we catch the angel strain;
Our songs are hushed and silent, or sung in minor keys,
As trembling hands awaken life's sadder symphonies;
And tears are falling—falling for loved ones far away—
Whilst for the holly wreath we twine the cypress and the bay.

Instead of joyous carols we hear the din of war,
The clang of arms, the bugle-call, the cannons' mighty roar;
We see the field at even, the wounded and the dead,
The stars, like pitying angels, that keep their watch o'erhead,
And hearts, this festive season, are wrung with anguish sore;
O Christmas bells, ring in the time when war shall be no more!

. . . . .

"Peace on earth, goodwill to men"—thrice blessed angel strain—
God haste the day when o'er the world the Prince of Peace shall reign,
When nation against nation no more shall lift their sword,
But, joined in holy brotherhood, shall own Him King and Lord.
Then all the earth with joy shall ring, as earth's sad discords cease;
For Jesus reigns, who came to bring glory, goodwill, and peace.

The Whitstable Orphan Boys' Home, which was only opened last spring, has for its object the reception and welfare of the orphans of respectable people. It is in co-operation with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and has received seven of its boys. There are already eighteen regular inmates, and some forty London children (a number of whom were blind, and one deaf and dumb) have been enabled to spend a holiday by the sea. The founder and his wife have given their lives to the work gratuitously, so there are no management expenses. The children, therefore, derive full benefit from any gifts. Communications may be addressed to the founder and hon. director, Mr. H. W. Squirrell, at the Orphan Boys' Home, Whitstable-on-Sea.

Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund.—In the course of pleading a communication, Lord Erne writes: "We have at the present time seventy-nine ladies upon our present list, many of them very old and infirm. Others are assisted in illness, in the education of their children, etc. Every case is thoroughly investigated, and great care is taken to give assistance only to the deserving. We have been obliged to draw largely on our capital to meet the pressing cases which have come under our notice." The secretaries may be addressed 17, North Audley Street, London; and 4, Kildare Street, Dublin.

East End Emigration Fund.—All who are interested in emigration will find the report for 1899 worth perusal; for, apart from its own particular work, it contains valuable information and hints on emigration in general. The Fund is organized on thorough business principles, and does its work in a very efficient manner. The Fund never deviates from its principle of only giving money help to British subjects who are emigrating to the British colonies. Lord Brassey is president of the Fund, and Rev. J. F. Kitto chairman of the committee. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Secretaries, 34, Newark Street, Stepney, E.

The "Bridge of Hope."

THE "Bridge of Hope" this year attains its majority. During all the twenty-one years the door has not been shut, day or night.

Thousands have passed through its portals, nearly every one of whom has been helped to better things. To-day we are in touch with hundreds who are doing well, and many come back to tell us that, thanks to the "Bridge of Hope,"

LIFE IS DIFFERENT WITH THEM NOW.

The Night Shelter, the Refuge, and the Children's Cottage Homes enable us to help various classes of women, girls, and children, and we have been marvellously successful in meeting the many needs of the ignorant and sinful in this overcrowded neighbourhood.

In the refuge in Ratcliff Highway we have accommodation for seventy. Our beds are always full, and many are waiting to be received. The Bridge of Hope is in as much need now as in the early days of our pioneer work. There are young women whom we have rescued and trained, going out from us to begin life again, better equipped to meet and resist its temptations. How many there are, and what beautiful lives of usefulness some of them are living—not merely in domestic service, but in other positions of honourable trust. Truly with them "all things have become new." No longer down-trodden by others, or slaves to their own appetites, but here and there doing God's service as only those can who have realized the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and love much because much forgiven.

THE REFUGE IS ALWAYS FULL,

but the inmates are very young, many being almost children.

The Cottage Homes, too, are full to overflowing, for we have always many waiting in the Receiving Home to be passed on to Chingford. Altogether, we have 175 children.

I have just received a most touching letter from a young woman, now married. Ten years ago we took her in, a troublesome girl of fourteen. She came from terrible surroundings, and, as a result, was utterly wild and naughty. After some years of patient training, she went to service; and, with more or less success in that capacity, passed safely on to womanhood. At twenty-two she was comfortably married, and has a happy little home; but she visits us still, and looks upon it as the greatest treat to come and see us from time to time.

Many of our children have grown up and entered on home mission work. I should like to tell these happy stories, but they are pages too sacred to turn for general reading. These are with the infinite patience and tact of those who, from experience, are able to enter into the difficulties of others.

No one needs to be reminded of the present claims upon universal sympathy, and we rejoice at the splendid response. But, whilst all are doing what they can for the newly-made widows and orphans, and sending relief to far-away sufferers, we, who are working at home, need to remind our friends that we have these homes full of orphaned or destitute children, each one as absolutely needing help as any to be found in London or elsewhere. Sadder reading there could scarcely be than the records in our case-books, page after page revealing the history of spoiled lives, or of

LITTLE CHILDREN IN IMMINENT PERIL.

The calling off of funds in this direction is sorely crippling us. The work is thoroughly and economically done; but, without any church or association to support us, £4,000 a year is a large sum to realize. At the present time we are absolutely without a penny.

Surely, at this time, when we celebrate the birth of the Christ-child, the little ones whom He has left us to care for in his stead will not be forgotten.

The Cry of the Poor.

THE ensuing Christmas will be a sad one in thousands of British homes, as, with the progress of the war, and the lengthening of the roll of killed and wounded, the sound of wailing and lamentation increases yet more in volume. "The angel of death" is abroad in the land; we may almost hear the beating of his wings. It is to the credit of the nation that, at such a time, contributions of so liberal a character have been made to the various patriotic and relief funds. We may hope, too, that there may simultaneously come a welcome replenishment of the resources of the societies at homewhich minister to the and which run some risk of being overlooked amid the tumult and excitement of the time.

The Christmas season means to many thousands little but the renewal of the winter struggle with cold and poverty and hunger. The sorrowful stories of lower life in street and slum, as recorded in the press, instinct as they are with a terrible pathos, call for more than mere passing regret; they claim our practical aid. Here, for instance, is a tragedy of childhood:—

Two brothers, one twelve, the other seven, were found by the Westminster police sleeping in a damP shed and covered only with a piece of sacking. They gave their name as Bowles, said their mother was in prison, and that their father did not trouble about them. For some time they had been wandering about, sleeping where they could. Dr. Barnardo agreed to take the children.

The woes of poor families of the deserving and industrious class, who live in a condition of incipient starvation, press silently, but powerfully, for special consideration. The outcast, the aged poor, the indigent sick; in a word, all the suffering and sorrowful appeal to the sympathy of the Christian heart. Happily, evangelical devotion has been enabled, by God's blessing, to found and maintain a vast number of philanthropic agencies, well organised and wisely directed, and thoroughly capable of dealing with distress in all shapes and forms. In all parts of the world the broad stream of Divine love has watered and fertilized the arid desert of human sorrow. Christianity knows no bounds in its glorious desire to its effects are seen in the physical as well a the spiritual world. The maimed and outcas leper of the East perforce recognises the fact as he finds a refuge where he is the recipient of kindness in place of loathing. The ill-fed, scantily-clad mother understands it as she obtains warmth and food for herself and her shivering offspring at the Mission Hall, or Settlement, or Home. It becomes clear to the dim vision of the sheltered wanderer, as, amid the bright surroundings of some helpful institution, he gazes wonderingly at the bright texts that meet his gaze on every hand, and listens to brotherly words that bid hope revive, and that re-kindle Divine thoughts and aspirations.

Nor can it be objected that there is any need to distinguish, in this matter, in the use of the terms "social" and spiritual. Many of the chief agencies of what may be termed the modern social movement are the children of spiritual revival. Gospel truth has been their strength in the great work of reclaiming the miserables, man, woman, and child, of our land; and could we have placed before us a record of the successful philanthropic efforts of the last three or four decades, the sum total would be such as to call forth a cry of wonder and praise, "What hath God wrought!"

Since, then, these noble works have found their source and inspiration in Christianity, it is but right and reasonable that they should command, and continue to command, the hearty support of the Christian community at large.

This is not the time to dwell on the familiar subject of the advances that might reasonably be looked for as a consequence of a proper realization of the Christian's duty to give. Rather let us sound a note of praise for all the goodness of God toward us; and, in the warmth of fervent gratitude for daily light and guidance for the supply of spiritual temporal needs, make a generous answer to the cry of the poor. Well might a recent writer, in a parody of well-known lines, voice the need in the vigorous words:—

"I've half made up my mind
To take out a poet's licence for some fighters left behind.
Brave fight! vain fight! fight that the strong would shun,
Fight without hope or glory, fight that is never won.
Battle in filth and squalor—sordid, spiritless fray—
Through the roll of the drum hear a cry from the slum, and pay! pay! pay!"

Marylebone Medical Mission.

THE winter's work is in progress; the Gospel is preached, and healing is dispensed to the bodies of the sick poor. The work was begun in 1876s Since then vast numbers of the sick poor have been cured, others relieved; drunkards have been reclaimed, and many—who when they came to the mission dispensary were living without God and had no hope—are now consistent Christians. The destitute and sick poor are provided with nourishment. Every patient receives advice and medicine free. Dr. R. Chambers, 12, Bell Street, Lisson Grove, N.W., is the medical superintendent.

Ham Yard Soup Kitchen and Hospice.—The report for 1899—the fifty-third—shows good progress. The system of relief by recommendation and registration adopted in 1883 continues to work well. By this means a family recommended by a subscriber and placed on the register obtains relief on three days a week for a fortnight or a month. In urgent cases the food supply is given daily. Any poor person can dine here (or take home a dinner) for one penny. Copies of the report of this interesting work can be had from the hon. sec., Lieut.-Col. G. E. Perryn, Ham Yard, Great Windmill Street, St. James', W.

A Brand from the Burning!

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

"GIVE us tuppence, matey, for a pint." Dan's money, as a "brickie," was ten shillings a day, with ten pints of beer. He was wont, out of this, to allow his wife three shillings and sixpence a week, the bulk of the remainder going for drink. The much-suffering wife handed him the twopence as he went off that morning to work. So much per thousand bricks made is detained, as deferred pay, till the whole stack is completed; and it was Dan's fortune to meet one of his chums, with over seven pounds in his pocket, as he left his home that day.

"What, you, Dan? I've just taken my 'pence.' Are you good for a 'gargle'?"

"Yes, I can do with a 'tonic.'"

They entered the King's Head; and when evening came they were still there, and what with "treating" their friends, and drinking hard themselves, Dan's friend had spent every penny of his money

IN THE ONE PUBLIC-HOUSE.

"Landlord, trust me for a couple of pots," said Dan.

"I think it's time you were getting home, lads," replied Boniface.

"Well, let's have them two quarts first."

"No, you go and give them 'blue-ribboners' a turn now."

"Blue-ribboners, who are they?"

"Why, those 'holy-joes' down in the tent there on the green; them Gospel preachers."

"What'll you give us if we upset 'em?"

"As much beer as you like."

Dan looked at his companions, and, picking out two of the "hardest nuggets" (as he expressed it), said—

"Jem, will you go? Right, drink out of that pot there." For by this time the landlord had filled two pots and placed them on the counter.

"Bill, will you make another?"

"Yes, I'm in it."

"Then you drink—and now come on."

Leaving the house the three men made their way to the large tent, erected on Turnham Green Back-common.

"Look here, mates, I shall just set inside the door of the tent, and when the fellow begins to speak I shall get up and talk. Then they'll come to put us out, and I shall hit the first man on the nose. Then there'll be a row, and you got to help me then."

"All right, Dan, we'll stand by you."

As they entered the large tent, brilliantly lit by several "Arc" lights, a young lady with a smile on her face approached, and addressing Dan, said:

"THIS WAY IF YOU PLEASE, SIR."

Unable to resist, Dan found himself on the front seat, under the very eye of the preacher he had come to upset.

Despite his condition, he was thinking, "She said, 'If you please, sir,' to me, a poor brickie! Well, I never!"

"'When he had spent all,' is my text," said the evangelist.

Dan's thinking was cut short. "Who told him all about me?" cried Dan to his two companions. He listened till the tears came; but he dared not get out his old red handkerchief with which to wipe them away. He wished that the earth would open and swallow him up, for he was not only sobered but deeply convicted of sin.

The address was concluded, and a solo sung—as simple and as suitable as the message that preceded it. It helped the work of grace in this poor fellow's heart.

Before the closing prayer the preacher said: "Are there any here who are desirous of accepting Christ, and renouncing sin? If there are, will they rise, and we will gladly pray for them. It takes a man to stand up for Christ; but God will bless you, and we will help you."

Dan was on his feet in a moment! He had always prided himself on being a man, and now he was exhibiting his fearlessness and courage. A few minutes later he was on his knees, and by his side knelt the lady who had shown him to his seat.

Meanwhile, his two friends had fled, frightened from the tent; and, making their way back to the publican, had declared to the astonished man, and others, that "Dan was converted."

"Get out with you, what do you mean?"

"Well, we seed him on his knees, praying!"

"You wait till he comes for more beer."

. . . . .

"Here he comes," cried the men who had accompanied him. More than one pot of beer was held out to him.

"Come along, Dan," said the landlord of the King's Head.

"No, I've done with it for good," answered Dan, "I'm saved." "You're what?"

"I'm saved—that's all I know, but I know that—I'm saved!"

"Won't you have a drink though?"

"Yes, I will, for my lips are cracked, and my throat feels parched; but not that stuff. I've also signed the pledge, and look here, do you see that tuppence, I'm going to have a pint of milk," and straight into a dairy walked our brother Dan, and in that way spent the twopence which his wife had given him.

. . . . .

Bedtime came, and Dan, still true to Christ, said:

"Matey, we've never thanked God for his mercies, let's go on our knees, and SAY A PRAYER OR TWO."

"Not me," said the more than astounded wife. "I'm not a-goin to mock God, if you are."

For over a week she refused to believe he was "saved;" and his companions said, "Wait till he takes his 'pence,' then you'll see him break out afresh."

Eight days after his confession of Christ, Dan drew his "pence"—something over eight pounds—and on going home, threw it all into the wife's lap, saying, "There you are, matey, get out what's in pawn, and you shall have the same every time." Then she believed Dan was "saved," and has never doubted it since. Soon afterwards she herself accepted Christ.

. . . . .

Such was the story told by Dan himself at the Metropolitan Theatre on a recent Sunday evening; and many instances were also related of others who had been blessed through him.

Seventeen years have passed away since he entered that tent where I was preaching Christ, and until last Sunday I had only seen him once; and, as he told out in his own simple language what God had done for him, I did not wonder that the Lord had greatly used him, for it was all so natural and

SO REAL A STORY.

Dan is now one of the largest contractors in Kent, and, as he says, "If anything happens to me, the wife will have seven or eight pounds a week coming in."

What a difference, "three and sixpence" a week, to keep house on, when the husband is an unconverted "brickie," plus innumerable pawn-tickets.

Home! happiness! and all she can require in time and eternity, plus a loving and converted husband. A well-to-do contractor, and a C.C., now he is a Christian. And yet, however strange as it may appear, it is a fact—Dan does not know his letters, nor does he appear able to learn them.

"To God be the glory, great things hath He done."

Working Lads' Institute.—In consequence of the important alterations now being made in the Institute, Whitechapel, E., it is found impracticable to hold the usual inaugural meeting of the winter session. The various departments of work will be carried on as far as possible during the alterations and renovation of the premises. When the building is completed, it is proposed holding a public meeting, at which the annual report will be submitted. It will be interesting to subscribers to hear that the whole of the liabilities on the Institute, amounting to nearly £10,000, have been paid off. Rev. Thos. Jackson is superintendent.

In "Little China,"

FROM time to time, when I have been passing through Limehouse Causeway ("Little China," as it is called), I have noticed Chinamen in their quaint Eastern costumes, and for the moment have felt it a little difficult to realize that I was in London. As a Christian, I wondered whether anything was done for their souls. It is true that printed Gospels could be given to them, but even these hardly take the place of "the foolishness of of preaching." Who should preach to them? was my query.

The very slight knowledge I once gained of some Chinese words, taught me the terrific difficulty of making known to men from different parts of China the unsearchable riches of Christ. Greatly to my joy, I afterwards found that the Lord had solved the difficulty. A faithful and devoted servant of God—also one speaking Cantonese fluently—has opened a small chapel in the district, and hundreds of Chinese from various parts of China gather to spend their evenings at the Chinese Mission, West India Dock Road. Gospel books are provided, and at intervals the

PURE WORD OF GOD IS SET FORTH.

A week or two since, I attended one of the week-night services. Owing to the fact that few men were in the neighbourhood, only ten came that evening. Some nights, I am informed, there are from twenty to thirty present. A slight refreshment had been prepared; but it was but sparingly partaken of, as the men, being well fed on board ship, did not come hungry. The venerable missionary then commenced the service by singing with the men a Chinese hymn to the tune "Old Hundred." The simple but grand music appealed to the Chinese men as they sang heartily. How strange it seemed to hear this tongue of vast antiquity thus sanctified!

I was then asked to preach a short sermon, which Mr. Piercy translated sentence by sentence. It was a simple exposition of the love of God, and of his Son as shown by his death upon the cross. The missionary thought that perhaps some of the men had never heard of the death of our Lord before; but, upon making inquiry, man by man, we found that some of the sacred seed in China. The attention paid by all was most satisfactory. Strange as the dress of the men might be, and unlike our faces as were their countenances, yet there was no bewilderment or strangeness. The Good News suited them as it suits us. After singing another hymn to a Chinese tune, godly conversation brought the happy gathering to a close.

I can only rejoice that the blessed Spirit of God had thus met a great necessity. May the days of our dear brother, Rev. George Piercy, long be continued to the glory of God, and may his hands be upheld by the Lord's stewards! His address is—Cathay, Cambridge Road, Leytonstone, N.E.

Finsbury Park Rescue Association.

THE annual meeting of this institution, held in Corbyn Hall, Crouch End, was presided over by Rev. Alfred Rowland, who expressed the opinion that the work of rescuing and reclaiming the fallen had never called for more attention. He spoke with earnestness on the duty of Christians—parents, ministers, or Sunday School teachers, in the work of prevention and rescue. Mrs. Allen gave some interesting details of the Home, and the blessing it had proved to those under its influence. The inmates were trained for domestic service, and the applications for servants always exceeded the supply. The inmates earned about £100 per annum by needlework, &c., done in the home, and the subscriptions amounted to £150. The institution, however, requires £400 per year for its maintenance.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant appealed to parents for their practical sympathy with the work, and to show to the world that righteousness alone exalteth a nation. The meeting was enthusiastic, and the results encouraging; the funds being considerably augmented by a collection taken at the close.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

NINTH WEEK OF GENERAL MEETINGS (December 10-16).

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE success of the afternoon meetings for "business men and women," so far as attendance is concerned, continues to be limited only by the capacity of the buildings available within the desired area. The audiences are, of course, composed of representatives of every class in the community.

"You see the theologian, the lawyer, the banker, and the stock-broker seated side by side; and, in the gallery, the fashionable West-End lady, the lady typist, and the warehouse girl in the same pew." Several evangelists and ministers have assured us that, within their knowledge, the effect of these gatherings is being felt fn every direction to the farthest bounds of the city. More than that, it has been brought under our notice that the wave of blessing is being carried into a yet wider field, for many of those who attend are not resident in Glasgow, and are taking the impetus and blessing received home with them to country towns and villages. Yet another element is the attendance of Christian workers and others from the country, who are thus enabled to come into touch with the work of the Evangelistic Campaign, which they could not do to the same extent through the meetings in the evenings.

In his evening services Mr. McNeill often recurs to his desire for the prayers of God's people for these central services. The other evening we heard him press the matter home with special earnestness, asking the hearers if they had realized how real and great an affair was this Campaign in which they were engaged. "Suppose," he said, "that all the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, all faith in Him, and all service of Him, had died out of Glasgow, this Campaign would be sufficient to start the whole movement all over again. Our twelve meetings for adults, in different parts of the city, and nearly as many for boys and girls, are being attended so well that from 13,000 to 15,000 persons are brought under the sound of the Gospel every evening."

For the general body of the working classes, the great central service of the week is undoubtedly the Sabbath evening one in St. Andrew's Hall. For the last two weeks the service has been commenced about twenty minutes before the advertised hour, because the hall was already filled to overflowing, and the hundreds who came later were unable to gain admission.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR CENTRE.

A clear, fine evening on Monday afforded unusual opportunity for open-air work, and an excellent beginning was made in this way with a mission in Pollok Street United Presbyterian Church. A great crowd gathered at the corner of Paisley Road as the Gospel was spoken and sung. Possibly the unwonted spectacle of the use of a brilliant lamp bearing the name of the neighbouring Baptist congregation, in connection with services in a Presbyterian Church, had some effect on the passers-by, as an object lesson in the real unity of Christians at heart. Under the pastorate (now coming to a close) of Rev. Charles Robson, himself a former president of the Scottish C.E. Union, Pollok Street has been an active centre of Christian Endeavour work.

After a short interval in his efforts in connection with the Evangelistic Campaign—during which he conducted a mission at Ballymena, in the North of Ireland—Mr. Hugh Paton resumed preaching in the Pollok Street Mission. Though not large, the audience was very encouraging, and the evangelist took advantage of the opportunity to address a few words of stimulus to the band of workers. For local reasons, it had not been thought desirable to hold any formal after-meeting on Sabbath; but the Lord had granted the blessing with the Word, and the preacher's heart was made to rejoice by one woman, who could not leave without seeking him out in the vestry to tell that she had been enabled to trust the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation during the service.

Before closing, the pointed question—"Are you converted, my brother—my sister?"—was passed from pew to pew. If any were really puzzled to know, an infallible "mark" was given to them by which they might judge. "Have you the desire to bring some one to Jesus?" For the encouragement of the trembling young believer he pictured his own hesitating first efforts to "show his colours" on the Lord's side in a country village, as well as of the great blessing which came to his soul through them. One of the great joys of his life had been that, like Andrew, he first brought his own brother.

A deep feeling of expectation was in the gathering, and after the general meeting a special season of prayer was engaged in on behalf of unsaved relatives and friends. Soul-seeking and winning were not neglected, but the burden on all hearts was that of the dear ones at home. Our hearts were gladdened by plain evidence of recent ingathering. A group of lads had been sitting in front of us, rough in exterior, and unaccustomed, as yet, to the conventionalities of such gatherings; but when we heard parts of their conversation, it proved to be of "the new life," and when we got a front view one already wore the C.E. badge. God bless the lads! They have a Saviour who saves to the uttermost. The large bands of workers are exhibiting a fine spirit, under the efficient and zealous leadership of Rev. John Harper (pastor of the Baptist congregation) and Rev. Mr. Hunter (acting on behalf of Mr. Robson). Valuable help in the presentation of the Gospel by solo-singing was rendered during the week by Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, Miss Macdonald, and others.

MR. M'NEILL IN HUTCHESONTOWN.

A fall of about four inches of snow during Monday night altered the conditions of the Campaign for the remainder of the week. Nevertheless, Tuesday evening saw a good congregation in Hutchesontown United Presbyterian Church (Rev. James B. Nicholson), Hospital Street, where Rev. John McNeill had made a start on the previous evening with a new mission. At the outset he strongly urged that, while many drawbacks had been removed, there still remained a lack of earnest, persevering prayer on the part of believers. They did not see their responsibility, and by their apathy were "tying God's hands." "He can do no mighty works when you do not ask Him. He has conditioned the pouring out of the blessing so that we must ask for it." Bringing the matter to a very practical point, the question was asked and pressed home repeatedly, How many of those present had spent even the shortest time that day in prayer for the particular mission, or for the Campaign in general?

The last quarter of an hour was spent in a clear and incisive argument to prove that sudden, even instantaneous, conversions ought to be more freely recognised and more frequently expected than they are. Death comes suddenly, and life would need to be as quick—which, thank God, it is.

Mr. McNeill's evening services are usually too long to admit of an after-meeting; but he tenderly and lovingly invited all who were conscious that they had decided that evening to trust Christ for salvation. Several responses were made very promptly, and others followed more hesitatingly, from all parts of the church, till nearly twenty had taken an open stand. But the preacher seemed to feel that he had not yet touched the real pulse of the meeting.

After a moment's hesitation came a request for those who felt that they now understood the ground of their salvation more clearly than ever they had done before, and we felt as if the pent-up feelings of many were finding true expression when a multitude of hands were held up. "Ah! I knew it;" said Mr. McNeill; and then he poured out his thanksgiving to God.

Before the audience dispersed, Mr. Nicholson made an impassioned appeal, more particularly to his own people, to take full advantage of the special opportunity that had come to them in this mission to give all the help they could, by attendance and invitation, and to make it a matter of definite daily prayer; "and so will we get the blessing." Among other prominent workers present were Rev. Alexander Simpson (Cunningham Free Church) and Mr. John Climie, evangelist.

TIMES OF BLESSING IN GOVAN.

Since leaving Kinning Park Free Church, to the work in which we have already referred, Mr. Samuel Mackenzie has been labouring in St. Columba's Free Gaelic Church (Rev. J. McLean), Govan. The meetings have been good, and from the beginning rich blessing has been granted. On the first Monday evening the Spirit of God was working so mightily that there was a complete break-down on the part of many of the people, and no fewer than thirteen persons gave satisfactory evidence of a change of heart and will. As the days passed, Mr. Mackenzie testified that, during all his experience as an evangelist, he had never known so satisfactory results in the first week of any mission he had conducted. Night by night conversions took place.

One evening a man went away determined to resist all appeals, but on his way to the underground railway station the evangelist found him waiting, because he found "he could not go home until this matter was settled." When the light did break on his soul, the strong man burst into tears. On Thursday eight young men and women were led into the light; and on Friday, though the meeting was much smaller on account of special circumstances, several were found at the close who were determined to close with the offer of pardon there and then. Men and women who had believed on the earlier evenings returned again and again with a look of quiet peace and joy on their faces, to show what God had wrought in and for them, and were busy telling to others the wonderful story.

The "ploughing up" was thoroughly done; yet all who were awakened did not yield themselves. We ourselves talked with a young man who admitted that the address had disturbed his mind very much. He would not admit that the Holy Spirit was working in him; nor would he pray for forgiveness, but insisted on going away without coming to decision—till "some other day." Will God's people pray that he may be brought to his knees with a full sense of his need? A young girl, in her teens, was evidently aroused, and the evangelist pleaded with her to remain behind, but she refused. Turning to a woman beside her, he asked her to stay and try to induce the girl to accept the Saviour. "No," was the answer, "I do not believe in trying to force people." "Exactly," said Mr. Mackenzie, "but you believe in helping them the other way."

The Highland element was very strong in the meetings, and much of the preaching was directed to their most common difficulties. Faithful warnings were given against ultra orthodoxy and hardening of the heart against the Gospel invitations. Special emphasis was laid on the danger of waiting for God's time, and ignoring the fact that his time is "NOW." A number were surprised and pricked to the heart by the statement that sinners do not want to be converted, or to go to Heaven at last, unless they can take their sins with them. This seemed to shed light on the state of their own hearts in not a few cases.

The other evangelists engaged during the week were Rev. John Ward, in Partick Free Church, Anderson Street; Mr. James Marshall, Jordanhill Free Church; the Weaver Brothers, Free St. Peter's Church, Mains Street; Rev. Gordon B. Watt, St. John's Wesleyan Church, Sauchiehall Street; the Bible Training Institute staff, Springburn Congre-

Children's Services.

Mr. William Thomson, jun., conducted services for boys and girls—in Gorbals Free Church (Rev. D. C. McNicol).

The lantern was in full use for illustrative purposes; but Mr. Thomson is a man of resource, and in other ways also the liveliest interest on the part of the children was aroused. Many "catchy" Gospel choruses were taught, accompanied by appropriate gestures—among others, "My sins were high as a mountain," the "Five finger hymn," and "I believe God answers prayer."

The other workers among children were allocated as follows: Whiteinch Parish Church, Mr. T. M. Pratt; Springbank U.P. Church, Mr. Arthur Klein; the Tent Hall, Messrs. Mackeith and Stewart; Somerville Free Church, Mr. John Paton; Bluevale Parish Church, Mr. Young; and Moncur Street Congregational Church, Rev. William Baird.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

At the Kinning Park Free Church Mission, to one of the striking incidents of which we referred to last week, the evangelist (Mr. Samuel Mackenzie) reports that, in all, about seventy men professed conversion during the two weeks.

An all-night prayer meeting is reported as having been held by a body of students in the district of Possil Park.

The current week is to bring the afternoon meetings in Renfield Street U.P. Church to a close. Every day special prayer is being offered in connection with the war in South Africa.

Scottish Notes.

At the annual meeting last week of the Free Church Ladies' Highland Association, it was brought out by Rev. J. Fairley Daly that in certain Western islands, where Popery still prevails, the Society's schools afford Bible teaching to all willing to receive it; and that, but for these, Protestant parents would be obliged to send their children to schools under Roman Catholic teachers.

A letter was read at the noon-day prayer meeting in Glasgow recently from Tiree, relating that a great revival is sweeping over the island, in which all the churches are sharing, and that a great harvest is being reaped. Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelization Society, has been holding a mission; and so many children have been converted that they have asked their teachers in school to allow them to sing hymns instead of the usual song melodies.

At a meeting of the Glasgow City Mission, it was mentioned that Rev. John Renfrew had now completed fifty years since his first appointment as a missionary, for thirty-four of which he had been secretary and superintendent. Rev. Dr. Laws gave an account of his early experience in the fever and small-pox hospitals of the city as a missionary, and said that the experience then gained had been of great value to him in his subsequent work at Livingstonia, Central Africa. He had, however, found as dense heathenism in Glasgow as in Africa.

A convention was held in Edinburgh last week of the Christian Endeavour Societies belonging to the North British district of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. Addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Smith (Wishaw) on "Missions," and by Rev. W. Glover (Whiteinch, Glasgow) on "The Revival we Need." A proposal was made that the Primitive Methodist C.E. Societies in Scotland should support a special missionary in Japan or China, and was warmly received, the subject being remitted to the officials for inquiry.

At the Glasgow daily prayer meeting a report was received last week of successful mission work in Peterhead Prison, the worker telling with gratitude that he found many of the warders to be men of God.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

A BUILDING at Carrubbers Close, Edinburgh, known as Whitefield Chapel, was, in the year 1858, secured by Rev. James Gall with the hope of remedying the lamentable state of things which existed consequent upon the neglected instruction of Sabbath-school children. Progress for some time was slow, but the addition of several branches—classes for the instruction of young men in literature, science, music, as well as prayer-meetings, bands of hope, etc.—proved a happy success. Soon after the Mission had entered upon its second year, signs of blessing in the weekly prayer-meeting found expression in the commencement of preaching services. This became a nightly practice, which is maintained up to the present time. Power attended the preaching of the Word, and the old Theatre Royal was secured for evangelistic meetings on Sabbath evenings. Anxious inquirers, however, became so numerous that the meetings were transferred to the Free Assembly Hall, where the work was continued with much blessing.

What was, in a great measure, an educational institution thus became an evangelistic agency, and as such it has since been known. Other changes came with the lapse of years, as operations were carried on with much difficulty and discomfort in cramped quarters in Carrubbers Close. During his second campaign in Edinburgh, in 1882, Mr. D. L. Moody grasped the situation, and, mainly through his exertions, £11,000 was raised, with which a site was purchased and the present commodious building erected.

The open-air missions have, in many instances, given evidence of the unity of Christians, and numbers have been added to the ranks of the soldiers of Christ. The exceptionally fine weather of last summer greatly favoured the preaching of the Gospel in the open-air, and the band of earnest workers have had cause for much praise and thanksgiving. In the mission halls the same interest continues to be manifested in the services, and many have sought the forgiveness of sins. The claims of temperance and moral and social reforms have been freely advocated, together with a full presentation of the Gospel.

The workers have had the co-operation and cordial fellowship of the evangelical churches in the locality, and every encouragement to go on in the name and strength of the Lord.

Missionary Conference in Glasgow.

A MISSIONARY Conference was recently held in Glasgow in connection with the "Regions Beyond" Helpers' Union. Rev. D. M. McIntyre spoke on "Intercessory Prayer for Missions," and Mr. J. Z. Hodge, of Harley College, on how he has been led towards the mission field, and of the new mission to Behar, India, under the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, where he hopes to labour. Mrs. Chapman, hon. sec. of the British Syrian Mission, gave an account of its work amongst the people of Lebanon.

An open Conference on "How to help the Missionary Cause," was led by Miss Kidley, of Liverpool; and Mr. E. J. Mitchell, at the evening meeting, drew a striking missionary lesson from the story of the Shunammite. Miss Viola C. Clarke, of the Congo Balolo Mission, Ikau Station, told impressively of the dark condition of Congoland, and gave instances of God's saving power among the people, and how He was teaching them to give liberally for his cause, and inspiring them to go forth and preach the Gospel to distant towns.

Pastor Smith, of the Argentine Mission (R.B.M.U.), spoke of the 5,000,000 of the Argentine Republic, with only about 150 workers, and the city of Buenos Aires and its 800,000, and only four little churches in it where the Gospel is preached. Miss Kerr (L.M.S., Tientsin) gave a graphic account of her medical mission work, and of the condition of the people in the villages, and how they were being won for Christ. Pastor Fanstone, who has laboured in Brazil for over twenty years, pathetically pleaded the needs of that field. The students of the Lady Missionaries' Training Home and Miss Mary Kerr greatly helped by their missionary messages in song. On the Lord's Day the Conference was continued, the same missionaries being the speakers.

Oxford Letter.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD is moving in the matter of temperance. A representative meeting was held last week to confer upon the reports of the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws. The Rector of Exeter presided, and on the platform were the Warden of Keble, the Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Sir William Herschel, Mr. J. Massie, the Hon. Sidney Peel (Secretary to the Royal Commission) and others. Instructive addresses were delivered, and as a result the meeting accepted a resolution embodying the proposals of Lord Peel's report.

The Bishop of Winchester preached a remarkable sermon at St. Mary's on Sunday. In his vast diocese the Bishop is brought into contact alike with the life of the crowded slums of South London and with the intellectual poverty and depressing monotony of the villages of the South of England, and his sermon was an appeal to the University to send of their best to transform the rural life of England, to awaken it from torpor, and to rescue the young labourer from the intellectual paralysis that seizes upon him when his brief school days are over. It is a striking fact that the Bishop of a great diocese, which contains an immense population of the poorest class, should feel the problem of the village weigh more heavily upon him than that of the city slum.

The sermon was the widest possible application of St. John's appeal, "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need," this world's goods meaning much more than money, no less, indeed, than all the advantages that life has for us, the complete equipment of the man.

"It takes a soul to save a soul," said the Bishop. The only saving force is derived from personal devotion and personal sympathy. "Send your best," he said, "to the country curacies, remembering that in former times the Universities derived all their wealth, and much of it to-day came from the land.

The Red-Marked Testament.

HAVING distributed many hundreds of the red-marked Testaments, I have already received many letters from soldiers, sailors, town missionaries, and others showing that it has all the peculiar usefulness which Mrs. Menzies so well explained in her recent letter in The Christian.

In calling attention by these marks to well-selected texts, the distinctive Gospel of the grace of God, with the Atonement and Resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is fully and effectively preached in thousands of homes, hospitals, camps, and cabins where the living voice cannot reach; and that such preaching is owned of God is shown by letters I am continually receiving from soldiers who went to South Africa in the earlier transports, and from reservists who write from their barracks at Portsmouth, where they have more recently re-joined their regiments. Town missionaries, sick visitors, and Sunday-school teachers find these Testaments exceedingly helpful in their work.

Imported Servants.—The importation of Scandinavian servant girls to some of the large towns in the north of England is stated to have proved very successful, the girls being free from a number of the defects which unfortunately have of late years been so prominent in many English domestics. It is said that, as female labour is plentiful in Norway, the experiment will be repeated on a very large scale.

The Late Nun of Kenmare.—Since the death of Miss M. F. Cusack, Mr. T. H. Aston has secured numerous sheets of her book, "His Yarn, and Another Story," which have been neatly bound in paper covers, and now issued at 6d., per post 7d. A few copies of the "Black Pope," (400 pages, illustrated, paper covers), are also on sale at 2s. 6d., formerly published at 6s. The proceeds from the sale of these books will aid the funds of the Birmingham Christian Evidence and Protestant Laymen's Association. Communications should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. T. H. Aston. Lecture Hall, Heath Green Road, Birmingham

Notices.

First, let me wish you a very bright and happy Christmas.

The Prize Question next week will be set from the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah.

I shall be glad if as many as possible will send me in their answers to No. 207 QUITE EARLY, on account of making the "Eligible List" for the Prize Competition as complete as possible.

Will each competitor kindly remember to give their FULL ADDRESS, as well as their name and age?

I am obliged to make the following new rule. Answers for the "second list," which reach the office after four on Wednesday afternoon, or from Scotland and Ireland after twelve on Thursday, will not be included in the list, but will be counted "late." Please, therefore, post as soon after Sunday, each week, as possible.

I should like to call the attention of parents to the notes which appear in THE CHRISTIAN every week upon the International Sunday-school Lesson. They would, I am sure, often find suggestive thoughts for Sunday evenings with the children. The notes which appear for the Sunday following the issue apply to the lesson intended for Sunday-school use a week later; therefore those who are themselves Sunday-school teachers would be able on one Sunday evening to familiarize themselves with the lesson for the Sunday-school class the following Sabbath afternoon. Thus the notes will fulfil a double purpose, and I shall be glad to find that their usefulness is thus extended.

Beginning with the issue of January 4, the notes on Sunday-school Lessons will be accompanied by a diagram or illustration affording a key to the lesson. Parents and teachers will find this a very great help in dealing with the young folk.

Christmas Poems.

PRAISES let us heavenward pour,
Christmas Day comes round once more!
Joy and gladness fill the earth,
As we sing the Saviour's birth;
Children all should happy be,
In heaven's sunshine, glad and free!

Praises did the angels sing,
As they heralded their King;
Shepherds did their homage pay
As He in the manger lay;
Wise men sought Him from afar,
Guided by that brilliant star!

As a child, from day to day,
Joyfully did He obey;
Gladness did his bosom fill,
As He wrought his Father's will Ever to his mission true,
He in grace and wisdom grew.

Through the joyous days of youth
Never swerved He from the truth;
Of a sweet and tender mind,
Ever were his actions kind.
Still is He the children's friend—
O what blessings doth He send!

How He came for us to die,
How He rose to heaven on high,
This the Holy Scriptures tell.
This you've learned, and know full well.
In his sunshine, glad and free,
Happy may your Christmas be!

Clevedon, Somerset. WM. KITCHING.

HARK, what means this wondrous story
Shepherds tell with joyous mien—
Of the angels' song and message,
Which they had both heard and seen?
Gospel tidings, peace on earth,
Through a loving Saviour's birth.

Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory,
By the prophets long foretold,
Has fulfilled the gracious promise
Made to faithful men of old.
Bringing gladness, joy, and peace,
Which on earth shall never cease.

Lo! in humble cot they found Him,
Infant, in a manger laid;
Men from far, in adoration,
Soon their freewill offerings made.
Joyful tribute to their King,
Gold and frankincense they bring.

Like them, may we join in service,
Do our little all to spread
Tidings of his great salvation,
Till all nations shall be led
Willing captives to his love,
While He pleads for them above.

W. C. JOHNSON.

IN Bethlehem's manger the Saviour is lying,
A Babe, pure and holy, Christ Jesus, our Lord;
Glad angels adore Him, the King of the heavens,
And join their sweet voices in one glorious chord.
The wise men are kneeling and worshipping there,
While humbly presenting gifts precious and fair.

Say, what shall we give to our King and our Saviour?
Myrrh, frankincense, gold, or like presents so rare?
Ah, no! let us rather, with minds meek and humble,
Kneel low at his feet while we offer in prayer
Our lives with their talents, our hearts with their love,
For use in his service till called home above.

MILDRED MUNDELL.

The Young Corporal.

A LAD, a corporal in the French army, when drunk, struck his superior officer. This was a serious offence. He was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be shot, and cast into prison to await the execution of the sentence.

There was an effort made to secure his pardon, but without success. The colonel, however, was much attached to him, and was unremitting in his efforts to procure a pardon, which he at length succeeded in doing, on condition that if ever known to be drunk again he should be shot dead.

The colonel went to the prison to inform the condemned young corporal of his pardon.

"Ah, colonel!" said the unhappy young man, as the officer entered, "you see what my folly has brought me to."

"Suppose," said the colonel, "that I should tell you that on condition that you never in your life drink again a pardon is extended to you?" A gleam of hope brightened the young face.

"Your life being the forfeit if ever you taste liquor again," added the colonel.

"Impossible!" said the poor lad. "I cannot live and not drink. Must I never drink?" "Never." The poor young fellow relapsed into hopelessness.

"Nothing could keep me from it. It would be impossible to keep the condition."

"I want your word and pledge of honour as a soldier," said the colonel, appealing to the military spirit and high sense of honour he so well knew the youth to possess.

"Then, colonel," cried the young soldier. "See here and now," and he lifted his arm toward Heaven, "that never to my dying day will I put liquor to my lips again."

That lad became commander of the Imperial Guard, whose very name became such a power, and he kept the pledge in the same spirit that characterized his memorable utterance, "The Old Guard dies, but never surrenders!"—Union Gospel News.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 24.

Our Royal Brother.—Heb. i. 1-9; iii. 6.

IT is recorded of the Emperor Diocletian, that he renounced the Roman purple, and retired to a private palace, because he thought that that step would be for the welfare of the Republic; but what is that compared with the descent of our Lord Jesus? He was the Beam of the Father's glory, and therefore of the same quality and nature; and the express Image of his substance, and surely the impression must be co-extensive with the seal. He was in the form of God, and thought not equality with God a matter to be grasped at, it was so unmistakably and indisputably his own. Yet He took on Him our flesh and blood that He might brother us.

What love was here! Do we gauge love by what it will prompt us to renounce! Here was renunciation indeed! Do we estimate affection by the lowly offices to which it will stoop? Here was a descent, unparalleled in the history of the universe. Do we measure devotion by the closeness of the ties with which the lover will bind himself to the beloved? Ah, how closely Jesus has welded our nature with his own. It is not a semblance, or fiction—not an appearance merely, but an indissoluble and eternal union of the mortal with Him who alone hath immortality; of the human and the divine, of our nature, in its sinless condition, with the Throne of Deity.

We become united with the Being of God, closely, indissolubly, and eternally. No other race of creatures in all the wide universe can vie with us in this. Angels may stand in the Divine presence with pure and blameless natures. The firstborn sons of light may gaze with unrebuked vision into the deep things of God. Elders who have witnessed the procession of the ages may prostrate themselves with deeper adoration before the throne. But none of them can affirm that their nature is identified with God's, or that there is any ladder by which God has come so near to them, or they climb to God, like that marvellous ladder of the Incarnation, at the foot of which Christmas calls us to worship.

Our Brother stands in the heart of the Throne, wearing for evermore the nature which He took to Himself in the body born of the Virgin Mother. His humanity is beyond dispute. Did He not hunger and thirst? Did He not sleep and wake? Did He not have special friendships? Was He not troubled to tears at the grave of his friend? Was He not tempted? Did He not die? And did not Stephen see Him at the right hand of the throne of power as the Son of Man? How absolutely He is one with us! All the comfort and help that came to Joseph's brethren, when they realized that their brother was the greatest subject in Egypt, may be ours, and more, when we reflect that Jesus is our Brother, and is not ashamed to identify Himself with us.

Suppose that the eldest boy of a large poor family were to evince very remarkable talent. He rises to the head of the Board School, takes a scholarship, goes to college, carries all before him, and ultimately climbs to a proud, important, and lucrative position there. He is now "a coach," or a Fellow. Plenty of money is at his disposal. But what a joy there is in that home! And, as he advances, he is able to procure comforts for his mother, to assist his father, to give his young sisters a thorough education, to push the boys forward into good positions in business. And when, presently, they go to his university, and find that he is not ashamed to own them, or introduce them to his friends, their cup is full. Turn the parable to yourselves. Jesus came into the human family, that He might lift it, that He might become the Author of eternal salvation to all who trust and obey. Whosoever will do the will of his Father, the same is his brother, whom He will recognise and welcome when the sun is cold, and the moon grows old. F. B. M.

Review.

Golden Text.—Ps. ciii. 2.

THE last day of the year, let us take a look backwards and try to count of God's "benefits." We can never remember them all, but the Psalmist tells himself not to forget them all. How often we forget kindnesses done to us! It is bad enough to treat earthly friends so, but infinitely worse towards God, the Giver of all good. Now, take a look inwards. Do we find ourselves any better than we were at the beginning of the year? Are we any more like Jesus? What have we learned fresh about ourselves? Then one look forward. Our God is always the same. The benefits He has bestowed in the past He will be ready to give in the future. What use shall we make of them in the New Year? Let us begin it with thankfulness, determined to show our thankfulness in our lives. Try and find out what God wants us to do, and do it in his strength. Above all, never forget to give constant "thanks unto God for his unspeakable gift."

Review First by Questions.

We had one lesson on Going to God's House. What did we read? What specially learn? Good to worship; right to worship together; how to worship; when and where to worship.

One lesson on Praise. Which Psalms did we take? Who is our great Deliverer? How, from what, to what does He deliver?

Lesson on Prayer. Reading what? Who was our example in Prayer? What did Jesus say about prayer?

Lesson on Work. What great work did we read about? What is our great work? Work, watch, wait, fight against evil and discouragements, work together; build up character.

Lesson on Reading the Bible. Why? When? In public and in private. What does the Bible contain? What is its best news?

Lesson on Temperance. Tell some of the evils of drinking; some of the benefits of being total abstainers.

Lesson on Keeping the Sabbath or Lord's Day. When was the Sabbath started? What does it mean? God's law?

Lesson on Giving. Where do we get all we have? What does God expect us to give to Him? What is the measure of our gifts?

Lesson on Right and Wrong Doing. What is right? What is wrong? God knows, God sees, God listens, God rewards.

Lesson on the Coming of Christ. Give some prophecies about this. How did He come first? How will He come again?

Review of People.

Esther. Beautiful, good, true to God and her people. Raised from poverty to Royalty to do a great work.

Mordecai, the Jew, faithful in the least, raised to honour.

Ahasuerus, or Xerxes, despotic conqueror, used by God for the preservation of his own people.

Haman, the wicked enemy of the Jews. His plot and overthrow.

Ezra, the scribe, who collected the books of the Bible together, went up to Jerusalem at the head of 1,500 Jews and their families.

Nehemiah. Great reformer. Took great treasure to Jerusalem. Rebuilt the walls, reformed the people, re-established God's law.

Malachi. Last of the Old Testament prophets. Helped Nehemiah in reforming the people and establishing God's law. Spoke terrible messages from God and loving promises.

Sanballat, Tobiah, &c. The enemies who tried to hinder the work and fight against God, without success.

Review of Places.

Shushan or Susa. Chief of the three capitals of the Persian empire. The name means "a lily," from the abundance of these flowers growing there. Find it on the map. Grand and beautiful place, full of Eastern luxuriousness.

Jerusalem. Once beautiful and prosperous; now in ruins, with just the Temple and a few houses rebuilt.

(Trace on the map the journey from one to the other.)

Main Lessons.

God's love and care of his own people, and fulfilment of his promises. Outward reforms are useless without a change of heart. True love to God is shown by obedience to his laws. Christ came and was made a curse for us. Punished in our stead. All who reject Christ remain under the curse. What have we to do?

In Bird Fair.

CHRISTMAS and winterly weather make no difference to Bird Fair and the Christ-like band of workers who "hold the fort" every Sunday morning.

Will the crowd stand in the open air when it is bleak and cold? Let any who doubt go and see. On a recent Sunday we were present, and the throng of working men would not go away; and, though the proper time for closing had passed, we could not finish till past two.

The preachers were men saved from the class to whom they now preached Christ—men who could talk to the people in their own "lingo"—men who can say, "I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him to life everlasting" (1 Tim. i. 16).

Some years ago Miss Macpherson asked God for such preachers, and the prayer is answered; so, of course, being God-sent, they are the right kind. But more are wanted.

Their message, too, is straight, and even scathing, sin and righteousness, hell and heaven being faithfully dealt with. Yet men stand riveted, and like to hear the plain and naked truth. Several have sought the Lord.

In the afternoon we addressed a large meeting of poor women indoors, and in the evening took the Gospel service. In addition to these works, the Home of Industry maintains its name by classes for children all day long. Then there is the colportage and Bible barrow; the work among young toilers, 8,500 of whom pass the doors from seven o'clock to nine o'clock daily; efforts among Jews, widows, and the training of little waifs for Canada. For this Miss Macpherson asks special prayer. William Luff.

Ladies' Irish Association.

WE would once more bring before our friends the cause of the Ladies' Irish Association, established 1821, when few hearts were aroused to the needs of Ireland, to send Scripture readers into lonely places, to support Protestant schools, and to "succour, help, and comfort" the needy, both those of poorer classes and those especially who have known better days, and hide from the public their present want—in some cases very sore.

We have had much encouragement in the work. The records of our readers show how gladly the true Gospel is received by hungry hearts, who "never heard the like of that from the priests;" and poor clergymen are urgent in their appeals for more schools, which would make it unnecessary for Protestant children to attend the convents, and many cases of need press for relief. But, alas! our funds are very low, and this time-honoured Association is much hampered for want of practical sympathy.

Readers of The Christian have helped us in the past, and we trust they will see their way to renewed kindness.—Office, 24, Clare Street, Merrion Square, Dublin. C. Maud Battersby.

The Stirling Tract Enterprise.

THE year's record of facts and results, entitled "The Increase," is not only interesting, but instinct with deep and serious teaching. It will be remembered that last year was the jubilee of this work, and public attention was called more forcibly than can be done annually to the work of the enterprise. "God gave the increase" is the watchword for the report, and it would be difficult to choose one more appropriate.

During the past year free grants of literature were made to the value of £3,907. The most important feature of the Report is the announcement of the amalgamation of the Monthly Tract Society of London with the Depôt. This Society had more than attained its diamond jubilee, having been founded in 1837, the originator being Mr. David Nasmith. For seventeen years the Protestant Tract Society has been amalgamated with the Monthly Tract Society, so that this last joining of forces is a noteworthy concentration of effort. Copies of this booklet may be had by addressing Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.

National Waifs' Magazine.—With the change of name from "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" to "National Waifs' Association," the monthly magazine so well known under the title "Night and Day" becomes the "National Waifs' Magazine." The issue for January contains many remarkable and pathetic stories of rescue, and a vivid description of the genesis of the movement from the pen of Dr. Barnardo. The illustrations are excellent. URGENT.

To complete the Good Samaritan Work of the

"Liberator" Relief Fund.

After seven years' earnest pleading, a further £10,000, or 200,000 shillings, still urgently needed to give relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life-savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse, in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age.

Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the Law of Christ.

There are 2,830 cases on the Books of the Fund, of whom 1,500 are Widows or Spinsters. 690 are over 70 years of age. 1,460 are over 60 years of age. Over 300 deaths through the disaster.

THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP

Is still coming to the Committee from sufferers who have bravely borne with their difficulties, till sickness or great destitution has compelled them to apply.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The London City and Midland Bank," and sent to the Secretary,

Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS,
16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

The Christian says:—"The third edition of 'Echoes from the Liberator Prison' (1s., Unwin Bros.), by Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, is issued. This well-known and forcibly written book, which gives such heart-breaking accounts of the sorrows endured by those who were robbed of their support by the Liberator crash, should be helped to a wider circulation than it has yet attained."

"AN UNEQUAL COMBAT"

IS THE TITLE OF THE WINTER APPEAL

OF THE

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The Appeal shows how acute are the SUFFERINGS OF THE INNOCENT CHILDREN AND WIVES OF PRISONERS, and how constantly their terrible needs are being made known to, and relieved by, the Mission in various Districts and Parishes.

The Appeal also shows that

are dealt with, but that a large number of

THE STRUGGLING, HARD-WORKING POOR are assisted in their efforts and supplied with CHRISTMAS DINNERS, Food, Clothing, and Firing.

Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Notes & Comments

OWING to the intervention of the Christmas Holidays this issue had to go to press earlier than usual. Next week we hope to give an extra supplement to deal with many matters unavoidably omitted this week.

Will our readers who have not yet paid their subscription for The Christian for 1900 please remit at once to our Postal Department, c/o Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, E.C.? To all our readers we would say, now is the time for new subscribers to be introduced, and we would ask those who have rendered valuable help in the past to assist us again by recommending the paper to their friends. We shall be glad to send specimen copies of The Christian to those willing and able to use them to advantage.

The year which is just closing will be remarkable in history for too great contrasts. Its early months witnessed the most earnest effort yet made in history to bring about the reign of universal peace, and the later the outbreak of an awful international struggle. The present Czar will ever hold the place of honour in the movement that led to the Peace Conference. The outward results were disappointing, but it was hoped that the general European sentiment in favour of a peaceful solution of national and racial quarrels would receive an immense and permanent impulse. That some good was effected in this direction we must hope and believe, and the happy issue of the Venezuelan arbitration will go far to prove the mutual benefits of this reasonable and Christian method of settling disputes.

How far, indeed, the peace sentiment of the early months of the year will be ultimately checked by the events of the later months, it is too soon to forecast. It is certain, however, that the unhappy war in South Africa must tend to reawaken the fighting instincts of the human race all over the world. The year is closing amid gloom and sorrow for Britain and her dependencies; and the extraordinary quickening of patriotic feeling at home and in the colonies, while an augury of hope for the future solidarity of the empire, is, in another direction, full of peril to our higher interests as a people. Not since the Indian Mutiny has there been a time of such painful tension and uncertainty in the public mind. Britain is upon her trial in more senses than one.

The pressure of the past weighs heavily on the thoughtful mind with the closing days and hours of the old year. This pressure is apt to become a tyranny. As life goes on we are tempted to cast frequent backward glances, and the vision of past mistakes and troubles and sins is often vivid enough to sap at the foundations of both faith and courage. "The God of Israel shall be your rereward." God stands between his people and their past sorrows, their past sins, their past discouragements. A gracious cloud of forgiveness (which is better than oblivion) hides our iniquities from his pure eyes, and it should do the same for us. A shield of kindness protects us from the vengeful pursuing hosts of the days that are dead. And the memorials of his goodness and providential care for us are the only things belonging to the past which should rise above the gloom of the years as one succeeds another.

"Now abideth . . . hope." Before our next number is issued we shall be already in the new year. Let our first thoughts, when the figure 1900 rises before us, be of the faith that quickens hope, and of the love that sustains both. God's people are still, after nineteen centuries, crying out "How long, O Lord, how long?" The Divine purpose seems to move slowly, and with many a pause and relapse, towards its goal. But we must not permit our own impatience to be the measure of his will. Whatever be the immediate outlook to our eyes, and however we may be conscious of failing powers or thwarted ends in our work, He is ever the same, infinitely patient, resolute, unconquerable. "My word shall not return unto Me void." His purpose stands sure, and whether by evolution or revolution, slow development or sudden revelation of his power, his will must in the end be done. To believe that, is to remain calm in the midst of tempest, and to have the hope that maketh not ashamed.

In an article on the "Atonement in Modern Religious Thought," Dr. Horton admits that he has moved forward from his old position, that we can know nothing of the nature of the Atonement, that "the New Testament has no theory of the Atonement;" and he says that his change is owing to Rev. John Scott Lidgett's book on the "Spiritual Principle of the Atonement." In this book, it will be remembered, Mr. Lidgett devotes several pages to the discussion of Dr. Horton's views, and it has not been in vain. Dr. Horton now admits that there is something of truth in every theory, and fancies the day may come when some great comprehensive mind will weave them all into a harmonious system. Perhaps so; one thing seems clear through all the history of the Church—true Christians have accepted the view that Christ died for our sins, that God judged and condemned sin in Him, not as his own, but as man's; and that, through his blood, we have redemption, even the forgiveness of sins. The rationale may gratify the mind: the testimony of God concerning the value of the cross satisfies heart and conscience.

The member of a leading Presbyterian Church in America, who recently said "she was weary of the flowers of rhetoric and sapless philosophy, which was all she got from her minister," might well have spoken for many in our own country. There are multitudes hungering for the Gospel in its simplicity who are not fed by "the pastors" of the Lord's flock. How much of the preaching of the present day lacks both grit and grip! All too seldom also is the cross presented as the climax of the Father's love, the sinner's only hope and life; and the cleansing of the human soul pointed out to be in "the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son." With all the pathos of a quick, sympathetic heart, and the eloquence of an all-mastering earnestness, must God's saving truth be proclaimed.

In the excellent Life of Rev. Josiah Viney, just published, there are several heart-stirring quotations taken from his early letters and diary. Thus, at the very beginning of his work, he wrote:—

> I dread the idea of a cold, half-hearted kind of preaching. Lord, help; give thoughts, give expression, give piety, give energy, give strength, give a single eye; and then, oh then, give thy blessing upon all!

It is not wonderful that a ministry begun in such a spirit grew strong and fruitful in all good things. It was not popular in the ordinary sense of the word; but it was wise, tender, true, soul-saving. As Edward White said of him:

> He had not made half the noise in the world that some of them had done, but he had probably done a great deal more good.

The Sunday problem is being more and more complicated by the Saturday-night question. The threshold of the Day of Rest is for countless thousands the period of hardest labour. The working classes are the chief sufferers in this matter. They do their weekly shopping perforce almost entirely on the Saturday, that being pay-day for the vast majority of them. And the tendency is to do it later and later. Through this injurious custom both buyers and sellers are wearied beyond measure, and the result for many is a Sunday of such fatigue that they are unfit to profit by the privilege of God's great gift, the day of bodily, mental, and spiritual rest. In the interests of the Lord's Day a new crusade is sorely called for. A league of Early Saturday Shoppers would do an incalculable amount of good to the highest interests of the community, and make Sunday a day of rest, without making that rest a mockery through over-weariness! Those who have influence and opportunity would do well to impress this on the workers of the nation.

There seems to be a growing disposition on the part of cultured Jews to look upon Christ as the flower and glory of the Israelitish race. This is but a limited view of things, yet its significance is none the less remarkable. Even Dr. Max Nordau, the Zionist mover, has expressed himself in this sense:—

> Jesus is soul of our soul, even as He is flesh of our flesh. Who then could think of excluding Him from the people of Israel? St. Peter will remain the only Jew who has said of the Son of David: "I know not the man." Putting aside the Messianic mission, this man is ours. He honours our race, and we claim Him as we claim the Gospels—flowers of Jewish literature, and only Jewish.

Thus does history repeat itself. In the days of the Son of Man there were those who said: "If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them of the blood of the prophets." The Lord's rebuke was: "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! Ye build the tombs of the prophets and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous. Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets."

WHEN we were with our beloved friend in Canada, two years ago, he said in one of his addresses, "When I am gone, people will say, 'D. L. Moody is dead.' No, he is not dead; he is gone home."

The announcements in the daily press will have already informed our readers of the lamented death of our long-loved and highly-esteemed friend, Mr. Dwight L. Moody, at his home at East Northfield, Massachusetts, on Friday last. Our last telegram was to the effect that his medical advisers were hopeful but anxious, but we were not prepared for so saddening a termination so shortly following.

Mr. Moody was personally endeared to thousands of friends in Great Britain and Ireland, as well as in his own land; in each, a great multitude own him as their father in Christ, many of whom have passed on before him, but most of them still remain to call him blessed.

Deep as their and our sorrow is, we shall all most tenderly sympathize with Mrs. Moody and her family, who are also personally known to many of our readers—a family remarkably knit together by ties of tenderest affection.

We believe a Memorial Service will be held, probably on Friday, of which notice will be given in the daily papers.

The Christmas holidays prevent the possibility of our writing more fully this week; but our next number will contain a portrait, with memorial notices.

At the End of Twelve Months.

THE other day 1899 began, and now it is near its close. It has been like all other years in this also, that it has seemed to pass more swiftly than its predecessor. Yet it has been even more heavily weighted than most of them with events of momentous interest in its spinning "down the ringing grooves of change."

"At the end of twelve months." The year is a cycle composed of smaller cycles which we call months, and the years themselves form cycles of centuries and millenniums, during which the wheels of God's mills revolve, grinding slowly but grinding very small.

All the works of the only wise God are fulfilled in cycles, as He asks of Job, "Canst thou number the months that they fulfil?" We thank Him that He will not for "there is an appointed time for man upon the earth," and as soon as the cycle of his history under the present circumstances is fulfilled, the end of this age will come.

It is often said that Christ may come at any moment. So He may, so far as our knowledge is concerned; for the Father has wisely and kindly left it unrevealed to us whether He will come at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. But He will not remain away a moment beyond his own appointed time. When Satan has filled up the measure of his iniquity—when this Gospel of the Kingdom—the good tidings of the Reign of God—shall have been preached for a testimoney among all the nations—then shall the end come.

It seems from 2 Peter iii. as though we may hasten his coming.

Let all that look for "hasten"
The coming joyful day,
By earnest consecration,
To walk the narrow way:
By gath'ring in the lost ones,
For whom our Lord did die,
For the crowning day that's coming,
By and by.

The marriage of the Lamb will take place when his bride hath made herself ready.

There is no more absorbing feature of this dying year than the war in South Africa, and the call of so many Christians in the Nation for a Day of Universal Prayer. It may soon appear that there are causes which will weaken, if not paralyze, the hands even of Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener.

We need not specify them. They lie largely at the War Office, and are particularized in the daily and other papers. They indicate the imperative need of prayer. The position of this Empire is at stake. We love to tell of the hand of God in scattering the Spanish Armada; but we have not, at this crisis, humbled ourselves before God on account of our national and individual sins, nor sought from Him the discernment, the illumination, the guidance, the wisdom, without which we may go on blundering and failing, until we may find it impossible "to see this thing through."

If we lean even on Lord Roberts or Lord Kitchener, we may find some cause of failure still. Whereas, if we trust in God He will maintain us, in so far as we are right, and chasten and correct us, so far as we are wrong. "For He causeth his cloud to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy."

The terrible famine in India, far more destructive of human life even than the dreadful war, and more prolonged in its misery and agony, is another cause which cries out for earnest prayer. For God has wonderful resources, and, as He relieved Samaria when it was thought that nothing but opening the windows of heaven could avail, so He could relieve India in answer to believing prayer.

The year closes under heavy clouds, but, in answer to such prayer,

The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

Prevailing Prayer.

Oh! to be silent, Lord, and wait (Isa. xl. 31),
To hear what Thou wilt say (Psa. lxxxv. 8),
To have thy Holy Spirit guide (Jno. xvi. 13),
And teach us how to pray (Jno. xiv. 26).

That Thou, O God, mayst search our hearts (Psa. cxxxix. 23),
And show us what we need;
And in accordance with his will,
Blest Spirit, intercede (Rom. viii. 27)

For us who know not how to pray (Rom. viii. 26)
Aright—O! do Thou lead (Rom. viii. 14)
Our thoughts, that so, unwavering (Jas. i. 6),
Our prayer may be our creed (Mark xi. 24).

For as, in confidence to God (1 Jno. v. 14),
We tell out our desire;
He hears and answers every prayer
His Spirit doth inspire (1 Jno. v. 15).

Brondesbury Home for Aged Poor.—The eighth annual report shows good work done, in the face of many difficulties. The last amount derived from an annuity (raised by a bazaar held five years since) has been drawn, and though several ladies have come forward and joined the committee, each guaranteeing £5 a year to the funds, the income is not yet large enough to pay expenses. Both committee and inmates are chosen irrespective of religious distinctions. The address of the Home is 63, Tennyson Road, Kilburn, N.W.

Faith before Love.

By Dr. P. T. Forsyth.*

THE message of the Church to the world is not to bid men love, but to bid them believe. The message has come, in the refinement of our religious culture, to be too much, and too expressly, a call for love. That is not the true evangelical note. It is the Catholic note—the note of the Roman saint, the monastic community; the note of socialist piety rather than of the Church's faith. It is not the Reformation note, nor is it a true development of the Reformation note. Do not preach the duty of love, but the duty of faith. Do not begin by telling men, in God's name, that they should love one another. That is no more than an amiable Gospel. And it is an impossible Gospel till faith gives the power to love. They cannot do it. Tell them how God has loved them. Bid them as sinners trust that; preach faith as the direct answer to God's love.

The first answer to the love of God is not love, but faith. Preach faith, and the love will grow out of it of itself. Loving, as a Gospel, is Catholic. The Protestant and evangelical Gospel is believing. Believe in Christ crucified, and the love will come. Love must come if we believe in love. But it has first to be believed in before it is imitated. "We are not saved by the love we feel, but by the love we trust." And what we need in our preaching to-day is not so much Reformation truths, nor even Reformation enthusiasm, but the Reformation note and order of faith—of faith as an evangelical, personal experience—faith as the peace and confidence of being redeemed and forgiven by the death of Christ, and by nothing else whatever.

Thoughts on Sin.

By Pastor F. E. Marsh.

VI.—A Servitude (Rom. vi. 20).

"BUT now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Two things which God accomplishes through the Gospel of his grace are emancipation from sin's guilt and government, and enrolment unto Christ to God's service. There are four steps in this verse; namely, disjunction from sin's mastery, introduction into God's service, reproduction of God's character in the fruit borne, and induction into the glory of everlasting life.

The emphasis should be laid upon the words, "to God." There are many relative blessings in which the Christian glories. We are delivered from coming wrath (1 Thess. i. 10), called to coming glory (1 Peter v. 10), adopted into God's family (Eph. i. 5), possessors of eternal life (1 John v. 12), accepted in the Beloved (Eph. i. 6), made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light (Col. i. 12), and blessed with all spiritual blessings (Eph. i. 3); but all these bestowments of the Gospel are only of value to us experimentally, and are luminous with reality, as we remember we are brought to God. Therefore, to be taken up with them, and not with Him, is to lose the blessing of those blessings, for they are only blessings as they centre in Him.

World-wide Circle of Prayer.—Writing to Rev. J. O. West, vicar of Rowington, Warwick, and hon. secretary of this union, Dean Howell (St. David's) suggests "the observance of the first day of the New Year as a day of universal prayer for the manifestation of the presence and power of God the Holy Ghost throughout Christendom—a blessing which will include all others." The Dean urges this very strongly as a subject in which there can hardly be a difference of opinion among Christians, and compared with which "other needs amount almost to an impertinence." "Without the Breath of God, all hope of evangelizing the world, or of promoting Christian brotherhood, is a delusion. The way to the heart of the world is through Pentecost. Nationally and internationally the call is—'Christians, to your knees!'"

Beneficent Moths.

"IF you please, Ma'am, the moths have got into Miss A——'s drawer!" My old, confidential cook was standing in the doorway of a bedroom which had become in our house sacred as a shrine, for from it had gone away to the Father's house, only a few weeks before, a sister of mine, surely one of the loveliest and best of God's earthly saints. She had always lived with me, and to children and servants alike her beautiful unselfishness and Christian courtesy and benevolence bore eloquent testimony to the grace of her Master, Christ. It was not the cook's duty to attend to any of the bedrooms, but our good Mary always claimed the privilege of keeping this one in immaculate order, and on this particular day she was turning it out for a thorough sweeping, which necessitated a small drawer, at the bottom of an ornamentally shaped chest, being lifted out for the process of dusting underneath.

It was this drawer that she was now holding in her hand with a rueful air of commiseration, evidently wishing for my advice. But I had not heart to give any. It was one of my black-letter days—days which any reader who is familiar with over-strained nerves and keenly emotional feeling knows but too well. That morning one of my letters had been from a harassed mother of eight children with, alas, inadequate, most inadequate means, for clothes, and food, and education. She was a family connection of ours, and so entitled to pour out her troubles to me, and just now there was a peculiar complication, which made immediate help urgently desirable.

The longing of my heart as I read her letter—written, I know, with no thought of any help from me but prayerful sympathy—was, "Oh, that I had £5 to send to her!" Then came the tearful thought of the large-hearted sister whose purse-strings had always relaxed so readily in presence of real need, and who would so gladly have helped me now. But her income had been principally derived from annuities, and so had lapsed at her death, and just then five pounds seemed as remote from my grasp for charitable purposes as the Koh-i-noor. So, in order to fight down the depression, and gain, perhaps, some light on my action with regard to the letter—for I did want to help a little—I determined to go out on some business that would take me from home for a few hours; and it was as I came down stairs, dressed for my walk, that I encountered Mary with her woe-begone face and

THE MOTH-INVESTED DRAWER.

I am afraid my remark, "Oh, I must leave it to you to deal with, Mary," may have sounded curt, but Mary knew that I was only troubled, not vexed. Almost every step of my walk that morning was taken to the accompaniment of a half-mournful, half-petulant longing for £5; so I did not come home rested either in body or in mind, and it seemed as if I could not get away from that drawer, for Mary met me at the foot of the stairs with further particulars. "The moths had got into a pair of Miss A.'s fur cuffs, ma'am, and they were so completely spoiled that I have had to burn them. I have taken the papers that were laid at the bottom of the drawer into your room for you to look over."

I mentally winced at the idea of an occupation that would so surely open wounds that were still so sore; but any duty connected with my darling must be attended to; and so, immediately after my lunch, I began the task—papers that her dear hands had carefully folded and preserved, but principally printed matter of no value—and, almost mechanically, I put them, one by one, on a heap for the waste-paper basket. But, as I thus laid one of them aside, a strange monition came to me most forcibly. I know not how the impression was made, but I was most distinctly bidden to "look at that again!" I did look, but with a dulled intelligence that only discerned a printed form that used to come to my sister with her railway dividends, and which she tore off as useless.

Again I threw it on the pile for burning. But once more the strange and irresistible impulse came to "look at it again;" and, taking it up now with quickened interest, I saw that it was actually a dividend warrant which had never been torn off nor cashed. It was not even signed, but, looking at the amount, I saw it was for £4 19s. 4d.; and, as I thought how singularly near it came to the sum I had been longing for, I could not but exclaim half aloud, "Dear Auntie, how sorry she would be that, for want of her signature, this should be useless!" And then this strange inner voice began again, and most plainly suggested to me, "but you are her executor—

YOU CAN SIGN FOR HER."

I did sign it, and sent it away by that day's mail to the banker; but in such an unbelieving spirit that it was with a shock of gratitude and praise that, by return of post, I received, minus eightpence, the five pounds for which I had longed.

I wish to emphasize the fact—which, perhaps, my readers have already noticed—that through the whole of this experience my mental attitude had been a murmuring, rather than a prayerful one. This, I know, was greatly owing to physical causes, for I had been passing through very deep waters, and my nerves were sorely shaken. But how it all magnified the wonderful designs of my Heavenly Father! Had I interceded in prayer, I might have felt in some measure a sharer in that grand scheme of providence that wrought such good through seeming ill. Now, taking the largess into confessedly undeserving hands, and utterly ashamed of my dull unbelief, I could utter, as perhaps never before, the profound ascription of praise: "For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory!" M. C. F.

Needless Sunday Traffic.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the letter of "Shareholder" on the above subject, in your paper a few weeks ago, I beg to inform your correspondent, and all who are interested in this most important matter, that there already exists a "Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath" in connection with the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, and which has done excellent work along the lines suggested in the above letter. Through the indefatigable labours of the secretary, Mr. James Fox Wilson, of 22, Western Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, memorials have been presented at the general meetings of several of the trunk line companies; and even so recently as August last such a memorial, signed by nearly 1,300 proprietors, was presented at the meeting of the London and North-Western Railway. Arrangements have been made for other presentations in February, 1900. The Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe has kindly consented to speak in favour of memorials to the Great Northern and Great Eastern Railways at their respective half-yearly meetings; and Sir Mark John McT. Stewart, Bart., M.P., to perform the same kind office in the case of the London and South-Western Company, if the time should prove suitable. These memorials are ready.

It is also in prospect to make another canvass of the shareholders of the London and North-Western Railway next year, and at the present time Mr. Wilson and his helpers are engaged in canvassing over again those of the Midland and Great Western Companies. Full particulars of the work can be obtained from Mr. Wilson, by whom also subscriptions or donations towards the heavy expenses will be gratefully received.

As your correspondent wisely remarks, if Christian shareholders withdraw and leave the whole business to those who have no conscience about the Sabbath, the consequences must be disastrous. Rather let them stay in the companies in which they hold investments, and support every effort which is made for the bringing about of a better state of affairs. Prayer also should rise continually for those who have the care of this business, and if any gentleman shareholder should be found willing to support, either silently or vivâ voce, our speakers at the half-yearly meetings, our secretary would be very glad to hear from him.—Faithfully yours, (Rev.) Wm. Lawrence Tweedie.

The Secret of Peace.*

By Dr. D. J. BURRELL.

WE are like wanderers in the night. Voices are heard about us, saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it." Better still, the Bible is given us as a lantern, "shining in a dark place." But when, yonder, we see the light of the morning, our perplexity is over. Thus personal experience adds final confirmation to oral testimony and Scripture. Peter says we do well to listen to the word of eye-witnesses, and to give heed to the lamplight of prophecy, "until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

"O taste and see that the Lord is good!" "He that hath the Son of God, hath the witness in himself." All voices, human and Divine, are ineffective until, by vital appropriation, we make the Gospel an indwelling fact. Then we know that Jesus Christ hath power on earth to forgive sins. Then we, becoming witnesses ourselves, can testify that his love is an easement of all pain and sorrow. Then we feel his friendship is the great incentive to spiritual growth and usefulness. The truth is put beyond all peradventure when the day star arises in our hearts.

A woman came running into the city of Samaria, saying, "I went out to Jacob's well to draw water, and a wayfarer met me who spake as never yet man spake of spiritual things; He told me all things that ever I did. Is not this the Messiah for whom we have been looking? Come and see." They followed her back to the well and heard Him. They besought Him to be their guest, and He abode with them two days; and many believed because of his word. Then they said to the woman, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard Him ourselves and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." Thus, in the last reduction, a man is savingly convinced only by personal experience; when he can say, "I have met Christ, have made his acquaintance, have reasoned with Him by the way,

HAVE LEARNED TO LOVE HIM."

One thing is better, and only one—to see Him in the brightness of his heavenly glory. The day star itself shall fade in the high noon of heaven. Here we walk by faith; there hope shall be lost in fruition, and faith in sight.

A native convert in the South Sea Islands gave this testimony: "I listened to the missionary when he spoke of sin, and he and I were like two canoes going side by side. Then he spoke of salvation, and I dropped behind—mast broken and sail blown away—while he sped on. The sea drove me on a barren coast, where I lay helpless for a time. I arose in blackness and darkness, and felt my way like one groping along a wall. Then I seemed to touch a door; I pushed for my life; it flew open, and I beheld my Saviour, the glory shining in his face!"

The fulness of revelation is before us. Meanwhile, let us use the light we have, and live up to it. Let us listen to the voice of eye-witnesses, follow the gleam of the Scriptures, and heed the testimony of our hearts. Here is the secret of peace and moral earnestness. And in due time all shadows will vanish in the Sun's glory. Our path shall be "as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

A Working Men's Mission.—The Mission directed by the brothers, Messrs. Thomas and James Young, in the populous South London district adjacent to the well-known New Cut, maintains a vigorous work in a needy centre. The twenty-second annual report is a simple but interesting record of continued progress in the many evangelistic and philanthropic agencies connected with the Mission. In view of the fact that the lease of certain of the premises will shortly expire, a building fund has been started. Mr. T. A. Denny is the president of the Mission. Communications for the Messrs. Young may be addressed 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars Road, S.E.

SUNDAY, December 31. Esther viii.

SO far Esther had only succeeded in obtaining the downfall and death of Haman; but the result of his machinations against her people had yet to be annulled. Inasmuch, however, as that which was written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's seal, was irreversible, all that could be done was to empower the Jews to stand up for their rights and resist to the uttermost. There was every need, however, for haste. Throughout that vast empire, which reached from India to Ethiopia, the Jews' enemies were prepared to execute the first edict against the hated people, and take their spoils. It was necessary, therefore, that the swiftest posts should be requisitioned to bear tidings of the permission for the Jews to stand on their defence.

The moral is a very obvious one. Surely it becomes all Christians to send out the tidings of redemption, purchased by the blood of Christ for all men. Ours should be the swiftest steeds; our speed should be hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment; the service of so royal a Master demands the greatest possible haste. Besides this, souls are in imminent danger. At every tick of the watch hundreds pass into a Christless eternity, and the vast cataract of humanity pours into the abyss without cessation. Oh that they knew that their enemy, a worse than Haman, has been already judged, that the decree of death has been reversed, and that light and gladness, joy and honour, are within their reach.

These are the blessings of the Gospel. Light from the God of light; gladness and joy from the fountains of joy; the honour of becoming heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. May this be, indeed, a good day to you, full of the presence of God, and of the comforts of his redemption—"Gladness and joy, a feast, and a good day."

This is the first day of the New Year. In many respects it is more memorable than other days, as introducing the last year of the century. We stand together peering out into the unknown, wondering what may lie before us and our country, and the Church of God, but sure that, whatever comes, amid the growing hatred to pure and undefiled religion, God will care for his own, that the ark will sail through the floods and land upon the shores of rest and salvation, and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the edifice, which Christ has built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, He Himself being the chief corner-stone.

There could not be a darker time than that through which the Jews passed amid Haman's malignant hatred, yet how wonderfully God preserved his people. Often since then the waters have been high, and the sky dark as midnight; but the tempest-tossed mariners have heard a voice bidding them not to fear. So shall it be again. No weapon shall prosper that is formed against the Church of the living God, and every voice that shall rise in judgment against her shall be condemned.

The day which the Jews had dreaded was turned from sorrow to gladness, and from mourning into a good day. So shall it be with this year, which, in many respects, opens so sadly. It shall be turned for us also. God has hidden mercies and deliverances in the coming days, greater than tongue can tell! Do not expect sorrow and disaster, but lift your eyes to the hills from whence cometh help. God is a source of light and victory; He is our shield and exceeding great reward; He will interpose, and compass us about with songs of deliverance; He will go before us, and make the mountains a way. Light is sown for the righteous. Thrust in the sickle and reap the sheaves of joy.

TUESDAY, January 2. Esther x.

What an epitaph this is on the life of Mordecai the Jew. All the acts and might of Ahasuerus, the splendour of his monarchy, the dazzling glory of his reign, seem to dwindle before the beauty of the character of Mordecai, as it shines out in the closing verses of the book. He was next unto the king, as Joseph had been in Egypt; great among the Jews, who attributed unto him their deliverance; accepted as their leader and prince by the multitude of his brethren. The good of his people was the object of his constant endeavour, and peace was the constant benediction of his life. What a wonderful exchange from the obscurity and lowliness of his first appearance on the pages of this book!

He, however, did not achieve this greatness by his own merit merely. He was lifted to it by the right hand of God, who never ceases to care for his children. Life has many surprises; but there is a reason, after all, for every promotion of a good man to influence. He is called upon to use it for God alone, and when so used it is full of goodness and peace.

Let us ask that we may have the greatness which comes from goodness, the acceptance which comes from high and useful service, that we may seek nothing but good, bringing good treasure from our hearts, and speaking peace because the God of Peace has filled us with his own peace. The book of the Chronicles of the Kings is still being written, and amongst them God is prepared to inscribe the life and record of us also who have served our day and generation according to the best of our ability, and according to God's will.

WEDNESDAY, January 3. Job i.

The feasting of the children of Job was a matter of great anxiety to their father, lest amid the merriment of the carouse any had sinned and renounced God. The fear that any of them would renounce God lay heavily upon Job's heart. He little expected that he would be tempted so sorely to do the same thing. Probably this touch is introduced here to bring into fuller relief the severity of the trial to which he was exposed in his own life, when that which he dreaded for his children became a matter of temptation to himself. It is a beautiful trait in his character that he should arise early and offer burnt-offerings for each; for you notice that the burnt-offerings were according to the number of them all.

The tempter had carefully watched Job. When God asked if he had considered him, Satan had an answer ready, which showed that he was familiar with his principal characteristics, that he had carefully studied them, with a view, no doubt, to assailing them. Is not this always the case? There is not a quality of our character which is not the target of malignant glances and piercing sarcasm. The accuser imputes selfish motives to our goodness, and insinuates that we are well compensated for any goodness we possess, that our goodness is the result of the happiness of our circumstances, and that it will wither before the first blast of the east wind of misfortune.

There are dark days in our lives when messenger follows on the heel of messenger, and we sit down amid the ruins of our happiness. Ah! hapless lot, our friends cry; the Chaldeans, and lightning, and hurricane have been too much for you. Nay, says the believer, God gave, and God has taken away. He refuses to see any hand but the Divine.

THURSDAY, January 4. Job ii.

How pleased God was to be able to point to his servant Job, who had held fast his integrity. What joy we yield to God when we are able in his strength to withstand the fiery darts of the devil, and, having done all, to stand. But is there not corresponding sorrow when we fail, and come under the heel of our arch-enemy? Life is full of joy and sorrow to us, and not less to Him to whom we belong.

It is good that Satan cannot go beyond a certain limit. God will not let us be tempted above what we are able to bear. Whatever temptation comes into your life, dare to believe that God has first taken into account how much you can bear. It is possible for you to withstand, although flesh and blood threaten to fail.

It makes temptation very hard when those who know us best take sides against us. A man is hard put to it when his foes are they of his own household, when his wife is surprised that he still holds fast his integrity, when the voice of love advises him to lie down and die. This is the last extremity of sorrow. Not many can hold fast their integrity under such circumstances, or dare to receive evil, affirming that it comes from the hand of God.

The whole story gives us great comfort, because we see that misfortune is not the result of sin; but very often God permits us to suffer that we may, by our fortitude and faith, encourage those who are watching us, and learning from our behaviour how to bear themselves in the face of similar adversities.

FRIDAY, January 5. Job iii.

Job cursed his day. This was the condition to which the patriarch was reduced, and in eloquent terms he expresses what thousands have felt. How many have asked the question: Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? How often have men demanded why they should live at all if life brings nothing but misery. Yet, on the other hand, there are abundant reasons why the light of life should still be given to us, even when we are hedged in with trouble.

First, the trouble will not last for ever. Though God has chastened us through a night of tears, joy will come with the breaking of the morning. Our light affliction is but for a moment. Then, again, the affliction is working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, whilst we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. Moreover, God has lessons to teach to other souls through us, which otherwise could never be taught or learnt. Then, again, the outward and physical is by no means all. We have infinite capacity which lies beneath the physical and superficial, and this is like soil that God is filling with seed, but which hereafter will yield harvests to his glory, and to ours.

Take up the burden of your life, and live it bravely, daring to believe that one day God will take you aside, and explain what is now inexplicable, unriddling all mysteries, unveiling all secrets, and making the whole plan apparent. It is as though a piece of worsted work were turned from the reverse side, where the cross-stitches are seen, to the discovery of the perfect design.

SATURDAY, January 6. Job iv.

It is so much easier to speak to others than to bear the pressure of your own burden. That Job had instructed many, and strengthened the weak, was no evidence that he would himself bear the touch of pain without fainting. A man may have spoken of the fear of God, yet he may find it very hard to commit himself to a life of naked trust. There may have been integrity in his ways, but that may not supply him with hope. Eliphaz need not have wondered if he had known a little more of human life and experience.

His argument with his friend was founded upon the hypothesis that trouble is the harvest which men reap from the sowings of a wicked life. He, therefore, surmised that Job's troubles indicated some secret declension of his spirit, and that beneath the appearance of holiness there was some gangrene or cancer of evil. He was reaping iniquity because he had sown the same.

Job might answer that he was not aware of any evil thing in his life that would justify so grave a charge as this. So far as he knew, he had washed his hands in innocency and walked with God. But Eliphaz meets this self-vindication by reciting a dream, in which he had beheld the greatness and holiness of God. The spirit that had passed before his eyes had asked whether mortal man could be just before God—the inference being that he could not be, and that because of sins which God saw, even if Job did not, there was this harvest of trouble. It was, as we know, a false philosophy, because trouble is permitted for our refining and purifying.

The Indian Famine.

THE mail from India this week brings letters from all parts, but telling much the same story. As the days and weeks pass, the tale of suffering and misery grows blacker in its grim intensity and horror. While we are sitting down to our Christmas dinners, thousands of our brothers and sisters in India will be dying from starvation.

From Agra Dr. COLIN VALENTINE writes, on November 23: "On Sabbath morning we had 1,400 poor creatures at our Beggars' Church. Hundreds of people are dying on the banks of the Jumna, so that after death they may be thrown into the sacred river. The river itself has dwindled down to a small stream creeping along the western side of its ordinary bed." Dr. Valentine sends us a cutting from The Pioneer, which states: "The number of persons in receipt of gratuitous relief or on famine works in India increased during the last week, for which the figures have been received, 167,016, despite a decrease of 5,746 in the Central India States. The Central Provinces, which last week notified an increase of nearly 80,000, this week show the addition of 118,904, making the total for the provinces 533,173. Bombay's increase is 22,361, bringing up the total receiving relief to 169,354. Ajmere-Merwara shows nearly 80,000 in receipt of relief, and the Punjab and the Rajputana States each well over 70,000."

A correspondent writing from Dwarahat makes the excellent suggestion that when Christian people give to the famine fund it would be wise to give with authorisation for this specific purpose. He says:—"Giving through proper channels is blessed in every way. Unwise giving is as harmful as it is foolish and unnecessary. Every mission compound has repairs to be made, houses to rebuild, rubbish to be removed, roads to be constructed, and general improvements, such as can be done by unskilled labourers, where famine funds can be wisely used as wages to the benefit of both recipient and giver."

Several suggestions reach us as to practical forms of self-denial. One correspondent thinks a silver collection at the Christmas dinner table would meet with a generous response, while another advocates self-denial to the extent of a meal one day a week and devoting the proceeds to the funds. A letter signed by five workers on behalf of the Irish missionaries in Gujarat, appeals for money to supplement Government relief. Several cases, the letter tells us, have occurred of the

because they could not bear to see their children starve, and strong men who preferred sudden death to slow starvation. Orphan children are wandering about uncared for, and parents, naturally affectionate, are now offering to sell their little ones for a few pounds of grain. Others again are known to have starved to death in order to keep their children alive. Seed, and plough cattle, will also be needed against next rainy season, and food will then have to be supplied to destitute farmers and labourers right on till the harvest ripens. Much money, too, is required for the medical relief of the increasing number whom famine leaves an easy prey to disease. Twopence will keep a man alive for a day, five shillings will feed a whole family for a week, a pound for a month.

The Viceroy telegraphs to the Secretary of State for India that more than two and a quarter millions of persons are now in receipt of famine relief. The Secretary of State hopes that the missionaries will again assist, as they did in 1896-97. The Government is pledged to spare neither outlay nor effort in the attempt to relieve distress and save life in the present famine. Mrs. Laura Wheeler Moore writes from Basim Berar: "The year 1900 will, it is believed, witness the most gigantic famine the world has known. The prospect is simply awful. A famine of food is so fearful, that those who went through that of 1896-97 prayed God that they might be mercifully spared another such experience. But terrible as was that time of suffering, it is not to be compared with what now seems inevitable—as well as of food. Money and grain are what we must have, or multitudes of people will perish. We do not know what we shall do if the water supply utterly fails. But this we do know, that new wells must be dug, and old ones immediately deepened if we are to live through the coming eight months. To do this we must have money, and that in large sums."

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

THE seventh annual report of the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest contains details of the labours of Mr. and Mrs. Knapman amongst those who "go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters." The Rest is open daily for the mariners, and on Sundays and Thursdays services are held. These have been followed with encouraging and blessed results.

On one occasion a sailor, who had never known the power of Christian influence, and whose wild and godless life had commenced in a London slum, was induced by his shipmates to go to the Rest, and there heard what God was able and willing to do for him. He believed the message, and accepted the salvation offered; he his now boldly witnessing for Christ.

Several of the sailors on a man-of-war, which was for some time stationed at Zanzibar, received similar blessing, and left the island full of faith and joy, determined to win the other men on board to God. Some months afterwards one of them, writing to Mrs. Knapman, informed her that no fewer than fourteen on that ship had become followers of Jesus.

Visiting the ships is undertaken by Mr. Knapman, who devotes three mornings weekly to this branch of the work. Many happy hours are spent in individual talks with men.

The missionaries have conducted regular services for the Swahili-speaking inhabitants on Sunday mornings. These are frequently crowded, and there have been many inquiries to know of God and his Word. In this department Mr. and Mrs. Knapman have been ably assisted by Captain and Mrs. Agnew, who reside on the island.

With a view to the development of the work, arrangements have been made for two missionaries to be sent out, and also to make the Rest a strong missionary centre, not only for our own British sailors, but for all who frequent the island, and amongst the heathen around, who have never heard the story of Jesus and his love. Gifts of Bibles, literature, etc., for distribution amongst the sailors, have been of great service; also lengths of print, muslin, and other articles, are forwarded through the hon. secretary, Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, 163, St. George's Street, London, E.

Italian Military Church.

MADAME CAPELLINI, the respected widow of the late Cav. Capellini, writing from Rome, says that the annual report of the work of the Military Church has been delayed through various circumstances. In October two new regiments came in from Sicily, and a large number of men sought admission to the night schools, but orders were issued by their superior officers forbidding them to attend.

Continuing, Madame Capellini says: "I intend, God helping me, to go personally to visit some of the officers, and to remonstrate with them, telling them that, if my beloved husband was twice decorated by King Humbert for his avowedly good work among the soldiers, we, who follow in his steps, must not be condemned to ostracism with the clerical or socialistic parties, who are known to work against the welfare of our country."

Earnest prayers are specially needed now for the work. Address, Pozzo delle Cornacchie 14, Rome.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.—Luke ii. 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. i. 21.

PRELIMINARY. (For the teachers.)

THIS year we begin a course of lessons on the life of Christ taken from the four Gospels. It is most important that He should become to each scholar a living reality, and the interest in every step of his life's journey be vividly brought before them. Hence the need of much study and more prayer, ever keeping in view the one object, not head-learning, but heart-learning, that we may so teach of this wonderful Saviour that the scholars' hearts will burn within them as they listen, not as to an oft-repeated story, but to the most wondrous event in the history of the world. If the teacher's heart is all aglow with adoration, and love, and praise, the scholars will catch the inspiration, and who can measure the results?

INTRODUCTION.

We have lately been studying some of the prophecies about the coming Saviour. (Recall some.) Now we commence the history of his life on earth. All the history of the world, and especially of the Jews, had been one long preparation for the coming of the Son of God. The right time had come, the whole world was at peace, nearly all under the government of the Roman Emperor; the Greek language was universally spoken, the Jews' Scriptures had been translated into Greek, and they had carried it with them into all the countries into which they had been dispersed. The devout Jews who studied their "Prophets" were expecting the advent of Messiah. (See Luke ii. 25-38.)

EXPLANATORY.

Verses 1-5. The Roman Emperor sent the order into every part of his dominions that a register should be made of every one of his subjects, taking down their names, families, professions, incomes, with a view to taxation. The Jews had to go to the city or town where their great ancestors lived, in order for the more accurate enrolment. Hence it was that Joseph and Mary went up to Bethlehem, as both were descended from David. (Trace the journey on the map, down by the river Jordan to Jericho—seventy miles). Bethlehem, a small town, five or six miles south of Jerusalem (1 Sam. xvii. 12, 58).

Verses 6, 7. God ordered this because the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem (Micah v. 2). So the Son of God came down and lived as we live; He grew up as other children do, because He wanted to be able to feel and know just what children feel, so as to sympathise and save. There was one great difference between Him and all other children. What was it? Swaddling clothes were strips of cloth three or four inches wide, and several feet long, wound round the child, arms and legs wrapt in. No room for Jesus. Have we room in our hearts for Him? Sad to shut Jesus out and be lost for ever.

Verses 8-13. Picture the Son of God leaving heaven, and all the angels looking on in wonder; then one comes with the message. Describe the Eastern shepherds and their mode of watching, etc. To humble believing men the good news was sent, not to the king or the rabbis. An angel is described in Mark xvi. 5. A cloud of brightness was tho sign of the heavenly presence (Exo. xxiv. 16). A great army of angels praising God for his goodness in sending his beloved Son to be the Saviour. All heaven was glad.

Verse 14. The angels' song. First praise and thanksgiving to God, then the results to men of his wonderful gift. "He is our peace."

Verses 15, 16. They believed the message, came to Jesus, found it all true, and told the wonderful story to all whom they met.

PRACTICAL POINTS.

Jesus is a perfect Saviour—the only Saviour. Is He my Saviour? The coming of Jesus proves to us that God is our loving Heavenly Father. The Gospel message is one of joy. The birth of Jesus was the most wonderful thing that has ever happened on earth. What do I think about it? We have nothing to "fear" if Jesus has saved us from our sins.

"Echoes from Argentina."—A recent issue of this paper published in Buenos Aires contains an article by Mr. W. C. K. Torre, entitled "The Advancing Wave." The fight in Argentina between Romanism and Protestantism has been long and fierce, but now the wave of Protestantism is slowly but surely advancing. A "Liberal" paper is published in Cordoba, which fact is most significant, as this town is the stronghold of Romanism in Argentina, there being over 5,000 priests, nuns, and members of religious orders in the place.

Scottish Notes.

THE Glasgow Magdalen Institution has now dealt with over 7,000 young women About eighty or ninety annually are placed in respectable situations or restored to their friends. The average number in the house is 122.

The Glasgow Lodging Houses Gospel Union reports blessing in connection with its work in eight common lodging-houses for men and women, as well as in connection with the rescue work, in which a special lady missionary (Miss MacLellan) is engaged.

After a separate existence for many years during which much good work has been done among young men under the editorship of Mr. D. M. West, The Guide has now been amalgamated with the Young Men's Christian Magazine. The principal title of the new magazine will be The Guide, and it will be under the control of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A.

Commander Maitland Dougal, R.N., presided at the annual meeting of the Scottish Coast Mission, when it was reported that the members of the staff had held 2,073 meetings, and paid 30,000 visits on shore and afloat. Over 1,000 copies of the Scriptures had been placed in the hands of the seamen.

The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen were present when a local branch of the Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen was formed at Aberdeen, to which port 1,600 men engaged in steam trawlers and liners belong. Lord Aberdeen testified to the good work done on the British coasts, and on the wild seas off Labrador.

An interesting work of grace is reported from Coatbridge, as the outcome of a mission in the Parish Church. Over seventy professions of decision for Christ were received. From Dornoch district, in Sutherlandshire, we also hear of gracious results following special meetings. All over the land there is "sound of abundance of rain."

The Edinburgh Boys' and Girls' Religious Society has now sixty-five regular services in operation, attended by 7,451 children, and managed by a staff of 712 workers. At the annual meeting last week it was agreed to send memorials to the Town Councils of Edinburgh and Leith, asking them to put in force the existing laws for the repression of Sunday trading—especially by ice-cream dealers.

The thirteenth annual report of the Faith Mission tells the story of another year of steady progress. The staff of workers now numbers sixty-five, as against fifty twelve months ago. In all about 190 missions were conducted, being an increase of 50. In addition to open-air gatherings, about 7,250 meetings were addressed, the aggregate attendance at which is believed to have been about 405,000.

Following the notable revival which took place two years ago at Drumlemble, near Campbeltown, a new undenominational mission hall has now been opened in the village under circumstances of exceptional interest. It is believed to be the first in Scotland in which the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian Churches have equal vested rights. The five Presbyterian ministers of Campbeltown will preach in rotation on Sabbath evenings. The hall accommodates 240 persons.

The members of Glasgow University Christian Association have, since the opening of the winter session, been desirous that a special effort should be made to bring the influences of the Campaign to bear upon their fellow-students; and, encouraged by the success which has attended Mr. McNeill's services for business men, a definite request has now been made that he would undertake a series of meetings in or near the University. Should the request be granted, it is the intention of the promoters of the movement to petition the Senate to grant the use of the Bute Hall for the purpose.

Among Jews in the North.

ALLOW me to bring the Jewish Evangelical Mission under the notice of readers of The Christian. So far as Newcastle-on-Tyne is concerned, I have watched with deep interest its operations during the past ten years, and I can testify to the great good that has been accomplished by it. Many Jews have heard the Gospel faithfully and clearly expounded by Rev. Aaron Matthews and his coadjutors; and as the result of this several have been brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and are now earnestly witnessing for Him, and taking an active part in the Christian work that is being carried on in the congregations to which they have attached themselves. It was my privilege lately to listen to an address by one of these converts, which, for clearness of expression, soundness of views, and earnestness of purpose, would have been creditable to any evangelical minister in the land. About forty Jews attend the Sabbath evening services in connection with the Mission.

Of the work in Glasgow I cannot, of course, speak so authoritatively, but I have every reason to believe that it is equally satisfactory. Being a much larger city, the attendance at the services, as might be expected, is larger than it is in Newcastle, and the results of the preaching of the Word of life are very encouraging. Amongst the recent converts in the Glasgow Mission is one who occupied a high place in the Jewish world as a man of integrity and intelligence, and as one who was well versed in Talmudical lore. His accession to the Christian ranks has, I believe, created a deep and widespread impression in that city, and has led some to inquire as to his reasons for taking such a step.

I commend this work to the sympathy and prayers of Christian friends, and should any of them feel disposed to help it on by any donations sent to Mr. Matthews, 8, Swinburne Place, Newcastle-on-Tyne, or to myself, as Chairman of the Newcastle Committee, they will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

School for Bible Study.

THE Resurrection, Ascension, and Second Advent were the topics of the concluding address in Rev. George Soltau's series of studies. Mr. Soltau dealt with the subjects as follows:—

The Appearings of the Lord, after the resurrection. To Mary Magdalene (John xx. 1-18); to the women on the road (Matt. xxviii. 7); to Simon Peter (1 Cor. xv. 32; Luke xxiv. 34); to the two at Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 15-32); to the upper room company (Luke xxiv. 36-40; John xx. 19-23). These appearings occurred on the Easter Sunday. Five others are recorded—To the upper room company with Thomas (John xx. 26-29); to the seven by the sea-shore (John xxi. 2-14); to the 500 brethren (1 Cor. xv. 6) (cp., Matt. xxvi. 32; xxviii. 7-10); to James (1 Cor. xv. 7); to the Apostles on Mount Olivet, when he ascended (Luke xxiv. 50-52). To Saul, on the road to Damascus, "Last of all, He appeared to me also" (1 Cor. xv. 8).

The Ascension.—Matthew has no record, because the concluding statement, "Lo, I am with you alway," is to be emphatic. Mark, "He was received up, and sat on the right hand of God"' the servant welcomed after the work was done. Luke xxiv. 51: "He was carried up." Acts i. 9: "He was taken up." He is still the obedient servant waiting till he is sent for by the Father, not doing his own will. John makes no mention of the Ascension, but gives many references to it, such as vi. 62; vii. 33, 34, 39; viii. 14, 21; xii. 26; xiv. 2, 12, 19; xvii. 5, 7, 28; xx. 17. "He passed through the heavens" (Heb. iv. 14).

The Second Advent.—Matt. xxv.: He will return as Bridegroom for the bride, as Master to his servants, and as King of nations. Mark xiii.: As an absent Householder to his servants. Luke xix.: As a Nobleman to take his kingdom and promote and appoint officials. John xiv.: As a Friend to welcome his guests.

Mr. Soltau appeals, at this time of national trouble, for a return to the "Word of God, which has been put aside, doubted, discredited, supplemented by human opinion." The studies will be resumed the third week in January. For particulars, address Rev. G. Soltau, 85, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, N.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 31.

The Heavenly Record.—Luke x. 20; Rev. iii. 1-5.

THE Book of Life is a familiar figure in Scripture. It surely means more than an inventory of living souls, a list of those into whom God has breathed the breath of life. The idea is suggested that those whose names are inscribed there are called and chosen souls, who stand in the inner circle of close and blessed relationship with God. These are they who have washed their robes and made them white in the Blood of the Lamb; who have been twice born, once after the flesh, and again after the Spirit; who are not only as the first Adam in being living souls, but partake of the second Adam, who has been to them a quickening spirit.

When Moses asked that he should be blotted out of the Book which God had written, he did not mean simply that he should cease to breathe the air, but professed his willingness, like the Apostle Paul in after days, to be accursed from Christ, exiled for ever from the favour of God. Similarly, when certain of Paul's fellow-workers at Philippi are commended, and it is said that their names are in the Book of Life, we are taught that they ranked then, as they rank now, amongst the elect children of God. To be included in that Book, as Lord Macaulay, in his greatest essay, reminds us, is a greater honour than to be enrolled in the lists of heralds. The Book of Remembrance is for those who shall be accounted God's jewels. And, as our Lord reminded his Apostles, it is of more importance to be enrolled there than to be able to exorcise demons.

This Book is said to be the Lamb's (Rev. xiii. 8). Not a name would have been there if He had not shed his precious blood, and poured out his soul unto death. He writes the names in the Book because they are those of his own, his beloved, his brethren and sisters after the Spirit. He keeps their names there, not blotting them out from its pages when they sin, not ashamed to own them when they show themselves unworthy of Him, not shirking the responsibility of making them worthy of the great position He has given them. What a comfort it is to know that the roll is in the custody of the Lamb! Bunyan, in the vision of the House Beautiful, depicts a warrior with a resolute face, essaying to enter a palace, whose doors are barricaded, guarded, and watched by a host of armed men, and he cries aloud to the Registrar of the Book: "Put my name down, sir." Then he begins to hack and hew a lane through the crowd. But, after all, we cannot think that our names are inscribed so recently. The reference to the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the earth is conclusive. This earth is but the scene of the enactment and realization of that which was foreseen and anticipated in Eternity. We wake up to find that our names have been written by the Lamb, in indelible ink on indestructible page-sheets.

Is your name inscribed there? There is no need to wait in uncertainty for the answer. To think on God's name, and to speak of it; to refuse to worship the Beast and to receive his mark; to overcome; to walk with Christ in undefiled garments; to have no confidence in ourselves, but every confidence in the merits of our Saviour, who stands for us at the right hand of God—these are signs that our names are written in Heaven, and that we are among God's jewels.

It is said of a dying soldier that he was heard repeating to himself, again and again, the word Here, with all the emphasis he could command; and when they asked him the reason, he replied, "They are calling the roll of heaven, and I am answering to my name." May it be so with each of us, and "when the roll is called up yonder," may we be there!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

There are many Christian Endeavour soldiers in our Army, but as military regulations prohibit the wearing of the badge, a special C.E. ring has been designed for the use of soldiers.

One soldier Endeavourer sent home a sum of money, asking the Society to which he had previously belonged to send a box of books for the use of the soldiers. He wrote, "If I stop writing, you may know that I am dead or wounded; but send on the books. The men will be made strong by them whether I am gone or not."

The Late Mrs. Dorin

OF CLAPHAM.

"WHOSE is this image and superscription?" The question forced itself as people looked at the sunny face she carried through life. It mattered not whether it was the ordinary routine of daily duty in which she was engaged, or whether she was speaking or singing for her Master in the crowded assembly or the humbler class-room, in the sick chamber, or by the dying bed—all took knowledge of the brightness that characterized her. "Whose is this image and superscription?" Christian souls knew the secret, and rejoiced in the witness given. Men of the world marvelled at that which they saw was not of the earth, and which compelled them to recognise the reality of Christian faith. Such a life was an object-lesson of "the reign of grace"—the grace that comes only from God.

From the ranks of Christian workers in South London one has been taken who could, as we poor mortals say, ill be spared. At a time when the services to be rendered to the Church of Christ by consecrated women are more than ever being extended and acknowledged, and, what is far better, being owned and blessed of God, we especially mark the loss of a worker like Mrs. Dorin. She passed away peacefully in the early morning of October 21, after an illness of five weeks. For some time her health had been failing, but it was thought that rest and change of air would restore her strength worn out in many labours. This summer, when planning a holiday, she had remarked, "I should like to see Switzerland before I go to heaven." The words now have a touching significance to those nearest and dearest to her. Her wish to visit Switzerland was gratified. About a week after her return she was taken seriously ill, and now she has departed to be "for ever with the Lord."

Mrs. Dorin was born at Ghazeepore, where her father, an officer of the Bengal Engineers, was then stationed. Left fatherless at an early age, she was brought to England by a devoted mother, who still survives. Mrs. Dorin was educated in Edinburgh, but returned after a few years to London, where she spent the remainder of her life. For the last twenty-five years she had resided in Clapham, where her husband, Dr. Dorin, is a well-known medical practitioner. A local paper, in an obituary notice of Mrs. Dorin, states that "her form, so slender and graceful, and her smile and winning manners, have long been familiar in Clapham;" and adds, "her name has become a household word for all that was gentle, and benevolent, and pure."

For a few years Mrs. Dorin was a regular worshipper, and an active worker, at St. James' Church, Clapham Park; but for the last seventeen years she had been associated with the work of the parish nearer her home, viz., that of All Saints and St. Augustine's, in the latter of which her husband is one of the churchwardens. Mrs. Dorin threw herself, with characteristic joy and energy, into all branches of the parochial work. She delighted in the simple ritual of St. Augustine's, and in the faithful ministry of its worthy vicar, Canon Allen Edwards. In the mothers' meetings and in the Sunday-schools she was an ever-welcome speaker. God had enriched her with his grace, and given her the gift of simple, loving speech in declaring his truth to old and young alike. Mrs. Dorin carried on a Bible Class for ladies in the congregation, and to these her words were stimulating and comforting.

Another class held by her for working men has been a source of blessing to many hearts wearied with hard toil. To the factory girls in Belmore Street her addresses brought cheer and uplifting, whilst her winning ways and a saving sense of humour made her a favourite with them, as with so many other classes. Mrs. Dorin's Bible Class, held on Sunday afternoons in one of the rooms of the Baptist Chapel, South Lambeth Road (Rev. A. Mursell's), has been the means of leading many to the Saviour, and of strengthening Christian souls "not a few." But perhaps one of the most remarkable of her works was a Bible Class she held for policemen at Upton Chapel, Kennington. Among the men of the L division Mrs. Dorin's name was a power. Ample testimony could be given to the happy results of her Christian labours in this connection; and, though failing health caused her of late to close the class, after many years' continuance, yet even on her dying bed she referred to her "dear policemen." One of them came up all the way from the South coast to see her in her last illness, and again came to London on the day of her funeral. How dear Mrs. Dorin was to them might be seen when, on that day, four sergeants and two constables of the L division carried the remains of their beloved teacher out of her house and into St. Augustine's Church.

But, so far, reference has been confined to Mrs. Dorin's labours in her own neighbourhood. She was known and loved far beyond its borders. Claims were made on her time and talents by the Y.W.C.A., the Children's Scripture Union, factory girls' missions in divers parts, and by many other agencies. On temperance platforms Mrs. Dorin was a frequent and persuasive speaker. At Aldershot and other places she addressed meetings of soldiers with much acceptance and spiritual attractiveness. To the last she remembered that she was an officer's daughter.

Her works do follow her. As to her last days on earth, it will suffice to say that she bore, amid much suffering, a brighter testimony than ever to the faithfulness and love of her Saviour. Her last words were, "Jesus is here." The day of her funeral was one long to be remembered. Even those dearest to her had no conception how deeply she had rooted herself in the respect and affections of those among whom she had lived. A great crowd thronged the high road between her residence and St. Augustine's, and that church was thronged, as it has never been before, by a congregation, the most of whom were in tears. Numbers were unable to find even standing room in the church. From St. Augustine's the cortège proceeded to Norwood Cemetery, where the remains of this beloved servant of Christ were laid, "in sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection."

We cannot close this brief notice of Mrs. Dorin better than by quoting a portion of the tribute to her memory paid by Canon Allen Edwards, in the funeral sermon which he preached in St. Augustine's on Sunday, October 29:—

> The testimony of her life to her Saviour was grand in every way.
> I. It was such a sweet one. If anyone ever harboured the ignorant thought that it makes one gloomy to be a true Christian, acquaintance with Mrs. Dorin was enough to dispel it. She commended the Gospel by a brightness which was her special charm.
> II. It was a sincere one. There was nothing which was merely outside in her religious life. Down in her deepest heart there was truth in the inward parts.
> III. It was a uniform one. Hers was no spasmodic religion. She was not keen one day and lukewarm the next, and nothing at all the day after. Hers was a calm, quiet, uninterrupted, uniform walk with God. She was always the same. It mattered not by whom she was surrounded—sometimes by those who felt as she felt, sometimes by those who had no fear of God before their eyes; but the standard was never altered, the flag was never lowered, the tone was always the same.
> IV. It was a growing one. More and more she lived for Jesus, and wanted to illustrate his life in hers.
> V. It was a testimony of the lip, for she had a grace and elegance of speech and manner, and was apt to teach; but, above all,
> VI. It was a testimony of the life. She lived Christ. There was no mistake about it. There was the true ring in her conduct, character, and whole self.

The Old and the New.

The chapter is finished, completed its story,
Behind are its sorrows, failures and tears;
Pass'd are its victories, triumphs and glory,
Carried away 'midst the memories of years.

Naught that is fashion'd can e'er be unmould'd;
Nothing we grieve over ever undone;
All that is past is for evermore folded,
Fixed in its place in the web that is spun.

Mourning and weeping for hours we have wasted
Cannot recall what for ever is gone;
Sweet recollections of joys we have tasted
Mingle in thought with the burdens we've borne;

Memories of gladness, reminders of sorrow—
These seem alone what are left to us here.
The chapter is ended; but what saith the morrow?
A chapter's beginning, its opening is near.

What shall we write on the page of its history?
What shall the record of future days be?
Hidden away in the shadows of mystery,
Would that its story untold we might see!

One step is before us, and that must be taken,
Buoyed with a faith in God's changeless love,
Strong in a purpose which cannot be shaken,
To fashion our life for service above.

Pen Pictures from Afar.

Of course you will expect my sketch this month to have something of the joy and glow of this happy season in it. So many things have helped to bring the first wonderful coming of the Child Jesus to memory that my picture must relate to Him.

Let me then talk to you about a Christmas tree that gave no end of delight to girls and boys in a Chinese hospital in Hong Kong. You have not forgotten your Christmas tree when you invited a troop of your own acquaintances to share in the gladness of it. It will not be difficult, then, to imagine this one.

Your friends were all healthy and happy. But it was not so with those who were to receive gifts from this Christmas tree. Lame children were there, and blind children, and children with wounds and bruises; some who had suffered long and much, and whose and others who were strong and well. This wonderful tree was to be seen in the children's ward of the Nethersole Hospital.

Charming things in almost endless variety were upon it, which had been sent from Manchester, Bristol, Leamington, Derby, Aylesbury, and other places. When gaily decorated and lighted it looked very much like a real English tree. Don't you think that was splendid? And if the friends who sent those dolls and toys and bon-bons and warm things could only have seen the company gathered around the tree in wondering expectation, they would have been more than a thousand-fold repaid for all the trouble and care the preparation had involved.

But it was not only the suffering children who enjoyed it all. There was a big crowd of —children from the homes of Christian workers, and teachers, and doctors, who had been carefully taught, as soon as they could understand, why the kind Jesus came to live amongst men and then die for them. Really, I believe that tree was just as brim full of delight for these as any English Christmas-tree could have been for English boys and girls.

STRONG, HAPPY CHILDREN ALSO

The hospital children are taught also very carefully all the time that they are in hospital, and this happy festival was just a part of the teaching—an object lesson—that they might learn something of the great joy of Christmas and the love of Jesus Christ.

Well, as soon as the eager company was assembled, and the candles on the tree all lighted, they sang in Chinese our own Christmas hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing." Then a few simple words were spoken so that what all the gladness meant. At length came the moment for stripping the tree. The lady missionary, who is superintendent of the hospital, cut down the precious, glittering gifts, and handed them round. Each child's name and each woman's name was marked on the present previously selected for each. What bright eyes watched the distribution! What happy hearts there were when the gift itself lay snug in the hands of them all! I think the picture is as vivid as it can well be.

Do you know that ever since the Nethersole Hospital was built friends of missions in England—some of them young like you—have sent toys, and dolls, and sweets and other suitable things for dressing a tree each Christmas? And the young Chinese students and members of the staff have planned and worked to make this occasion all that it should be, and they have not failed once.

Now I am wondering how much joy you have given to others in little kindly ways? You may not be able to do great things. You may not have large sums of money from which you can draw to send glee and brightness to others. Still, little deeds of kindness coming from warm, loving hearts, and performed by willing hands, have in them, you know, a great deal of the Christ's gentle spirit when done from love to Him.

Will you resolve in your own mind, and, by the help of God, that the New Year shall find you seeking for opportunities to make sorrowful people glad, and troubled lives happy. Perhaps near to your own home there are some who have lost dear ones in the terrible war. Children, once as bright and happy as you are, may have to mourn the loss of a father who loved them as much as your father loves you. There is an opportunity God has brought to your very door. Seize it, without a moment's hesitation use it, and you will be in some degree like Christ if you wipe away a tear, or cheer a broken heart, or kindle a new hope. And girls and boys can do these very things if they try.

A Boy's Consecration Hymn.

Just as I am, thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come.

In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve, and no delay—
With all my heart, I come.

I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right,
I would serve Thee with all my might—
Therefore to Thee I come.

Just as I am, young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be,
For truth, and righteousness, and Thee,
Lord of my life—I come.

With many dreams of fame and gold,
Success and joy to make me bold;
But, dearer still—my faith to hold
For my whole life—I come.

And for thy sake to win renown,
And then to take the victor's crown
And at Thy feet to lay it down,
O Master, Lord—I come.

North-Eastern Hospital for Children.—Over 300 sick children of a very poor class are treated at this institution every week. The majority of the little ones are infants. The committee earnestly seek help, in order to close the year free from debt. Secretary, Mr. T. Glenton-Kerr, 27, Clement's Lane, E.C.

Revivals! Does the Work Last?

A PRACTICAL answer to this question was given in Belfast last week by the large gathering of over one thousand persons, who assembled in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., on one of the most inclement nights of the winter, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Belfast in 1874.

The chairman, Mr. ROBERT ANDERSON, reminded the audience of the remarkable work of grace which preceded the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, when some fifty or sixty young men were converted in the meetings held to pray for the success of the forthcoming mission in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, Lombard Street. Many of these men are with us to-day filling positions of influence in the Church and Foreign Mission field.

Rev. CHARLES SEAVER, D.D., Dean of Connor, stated that he was profoundly impressed with the value of the work accomplished at that time, with which he was intimately connected. Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY spoke of the change which that movement had effected in the service of praise, and with regard to the question of assurance of salvation. Rev. WILLIAM GORMAN spoke of the great work in Dublin; and Messrs. W. S. MOLLAN, ROBERT JOHNSTON, and W. H. MCLAUGHLIN gave instances of good accomplished. Rev. JAMES CREGAN, Congregational Church, gave personal testimony of his conversion in Liverpool at Mr. Moody's meetings in the Victoria Hall.

Mr. ROBERT M'CANN, Travelling Secretary Irish Y.M.C.A.'s, spoke of his conversion in 1874, on the first day of the mission, and said, while Mr. Moody owed much to the Y.M.C.A., the Irish Y.M.C.A.'s owed much to Mr. Moody. Until 1874 Belfast Association was very weak, but both its present secretary, Mr. A. D. Black, and its previous secretary (the speaker) had been converted in 1874. Mountpottinger (Belfast) Y.M.C.A. owed its origin to the same movement. The present secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A. (Mr. W. A. Boyd) was converted at Mr. Moody's meetings in Limerick, and the Cork Association was started by young men converted in Belfast in 1874; also the Qua Iboe Mission, on the West Coast of Africa, had its origin at the same time.

Mr. D. A. BLACK bore personal testimony, and closed with an appeal to young men to come to Christ. Scores of persons in the audience were disappointed at losing an opportunity, for lack of time, to give testimony to their own indebtedness to Mr. Moody's work. Could Mr. Moody have been present, he would have had no greater stimulus than the cheery words of men whom twenty-five years ago he had led to the Saviour.

Death of Rev. P. B. Power.

THE news of the death of Rev. P. B. Power, which took place at his residence, Eastbourne, on Thursday morning, will be received with profound sorrow by Christians of all churches. Our departed friend graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, and also took the M.A. degree at Oxford. He commenced his ministry at All Saints', Leicester, and afterwards was incumbent for seven years of Woburn Chapel, London, also holding the curacy of St. Pancras Parish Church. He subsequently removed to Christ Church, Worthing.

Apart from his pastoral work, Mr. Power devoted himself to the writing of books and tracts, and if he had written nothing but "The Oiled Feather," a book which has found its way into thousands of homes, he would have enjoyed a high reputation. The proceeds of much of his literature was given to philanthropic institutions, and proved a means of bringing in large sums for charitable purposes.

The Blind in Jerusalem.—Writing to us from Jerusalem, on December 2, Miss Lovell says: "There are now eleven girls in the Home, and thirteen blind women who attend a Gospel meeting. To these poor women we give a little assistance when means permit."

URGENT.

To complete the Good Samaritan Work of the

"Liberator" Relief Fund.

After seven years' earnest pleading, a further £10,000, or 200,000 shillings, still urgently needed to give relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life-savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse, in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age.

Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the Law of Christ.

There are 2,830 cases on the Books of the Fund, of whom 1,500 are Widows or Spinsters. 690 are over 70 years of age. 1,460 are over 60 years of age. Over 300 deaths through the disaster.

THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP

Is still coming to the Committee from sufferers who have bravely borne with their difficulties, till sickness or great destitution has compelled them to apply.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The London City and Midland Bank," and sent to the Secretary,

SEASONABLE RELIEF

FOR

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS

THE AGED, AFFLICTED, AND INVALID POOR

("Especially unto them who are of the Household of Faith,")

IN

CLOTHING, GROCERIES, AND COALS.

THE OBJECT.

I. To seek out the cases of those who would hide rather than expose their need—who would work for their self-support but are debarred, some permanently by great age or bodily affliction, some temporarily by sickness—in short,

The Deserving Respectable Poor.

II. To accompany the relief of bodily necessities with such praise, prayer and ministry as will lead the soul up to God as the One from whom every good and perfect gift comes.

THE PLAN.

I. Each case is vouched for by an experienced Christian worker constantly visiting the house.

II. At every distribution to those able to attend, a Service will be held, including a brief address to those who are resting on Christ, and those who have not yet been led to His feet.

III. When the person to be relieved is too aged or infirm to attend a distribution, the relief will be delivered by a Christian friend personally, and be accompanied with the reading of the Holy Scriptures and prayer.

Our desire is that what Christian friends enable us to distribute may be recognised by the poor as gifts from God through His people, and be enjoyed quietly in their homes.

Any gifts for this purpose will be gratefully received by

J. W. C. Fegan

The Holiness Revival.

In the December issue of the United Presbyterian Magazine, Rev. W. D. Moffat, of Edinburgh, has a thoughtful article on "The Holiness Revival." It is one of the very useful series on Historical Revivals, and tells the story of Keswick Convention and other gatherings of the same character. We make a brief extract:—

"The one fact that at the present time a Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life is held, on an average, about every second day in the year in the United Kingdom alone, is sufficient proof that the Spirit of God is stirring up multitudes of professing Christians in our land to seek a richer and more definite spiritual experience. This revival, it is true, may not have taken the shape or direction that we might have anticipated; but the Spirit of God is not bound, and preconceived notions as to what revivals ought to be, and how they ought to come, must not blind us to the plain fact that a great revival has come, and come on the line of a demand for greater holiness of life.

"That this is the only direction in which the Spirit of God is working to-day towards revival no one conversant with the facts would venture even to hint. On the contrary, events are transpiring sufficient to convince us that we are in the midst of spiritual movements never paralleled in the history of Christianity. One has only to name the great awakening of interest in missions, with the cognate graces of intercessory prayer and self-sacrificing giving; the Salvation Army, with its passion for souls; the Christian Endeavour cause, with its three and a quarter millions of young men and women pledged definitely to work for Christ; the world-wide Federation of Christian Students, devoted to the Lord's work in all lands; the new and widespread movement of women in nearly every branch of Christian service, to make this plain. It is no exaggeration, therefore, to say that a revival is already upon us, touching the Church of God on many sides, and pressing the claims of Christ in directions, and with an urgency seldom, if ever, equalled in the past.

"It is futile, at this time of day, with the results of more than twenty-five years' history before us, to give this subject the go-by, as being either insignificant in itself or in its relation to the religious life of our time.

"The movement is with us. It is spreading, not only over the whole of Britain, but, with wondrous rapidity, over the whole world; and any attempt to ignore it by a conspiracy of silence or crush it by supercilious or carping criticism, is as vain as it is unphilosophic, as short-sighted as it is disloyal to the Spirit of God. We have yet to learn that any movement, proved as this has been by its fruits, and seeking for clearer views on the doctrines of grace, and richer experience of the life of God in the soul, can emanate from any other source than the Holy Spirit. And if He be its author, it behoves us to understand what his purpose is in founding and honouring it as He has done."

Bible Flower Mission.—A circular just issued says: "At this season of the year, lavender bags, pincushions, everlastings, small evergreen, and all kinds of cards, are in particular request." The office of the Mission is 110, Cannon Street, E.C., Mrs. W. W. Turton, Hon. Sec.

Believers' Meetings for Bristol.—Special gatherings have been arranged for the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas Road, Bristol, January 16 and 17. In the circular of invitation, it is observed:—"The subjects proposed for consideration are: 'Atonement,' 'Worship,' and 'Christian Fellowship.' In making this selection it has seemed to us important to give prominence to those Truths which are specially assailed at the present time, either by the teaching of the so-called 'New Theology,' or the doctrines and practices of Ritualism. It is a mournful fact that the doctrine of the Atonement is, to a large extent, ignored, worship in its true spiritual nature is but little understood, and Christian fellowship is not always cultivated as it should be by those who are partakers of a common life in our Lord Jesus Christ." Communications respecting the meetings may be addressed, W. F. Higgins, 107, Stokes Croft, Bristol.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The Dean of Westminster is making satisfactory progress towards recovery, and is ordered out of town for rest and change.

The Estimates Committee of the Church Missionary Society report that a total income of £342,713 will be required to meet the outgoings for the year ending in March next. That implies an increase of £47,000 over the receipts for last year.

Bishop Tugwell and a staff of missionaries has sailed for West Africa. The party will go first to Lagos and there disembark for Kano, the principal town of Haussaland, about 600 miles distant, which is to be the field of their labours. The Bishop regards the Haussas as a fine race, capable of rapid development under British rule and Christian influences.

Ang-Lik-khang is the name by which the C.M.S. mission in Fuh-kien, South China, is known to the Chinese. When this first became known it created some amusement, it being supposed that the word was a Chinese version of "Anglican." But it is merely a coincidence. The name was adopted by the people themselves, and means "Peace Established in our Midst."

The grants made at the meeting on the 21st inst. of the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels included one of £1,000 for building the new Church of Emmanuel, Sparkbrook, Birmingham; £250 for St. Edmund's, Forest Gate, Essex; and £100 for the first portion of a new church at Swanley Junction, Kent.

Despite the refusal of the Diocesan Chancellor to grant the rector of St. Mary's, Woolwich, a faculty for a side chapel with a second "Altar," the rector has made such a side chapel, and other illegal changes in church fittings and furniture. Having been ordered to replace the old oak Communion table and pannelling (with the Ten Commandments) the rector has disobeyed this order also, and has erected a stone altar. The parishioners have ordered the People's Warden, Mr. W. M. Woodford, to apply for a faculty to set the church in order, and the application is to be heard at St. Saviour's, Southwark, on January 11, at 11 a.m.

Congregational.

Mr. Thomas Smith has been elected president for 1900 of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, in succession to Rev. Dr. Mackennal.

Holloway Chapel, which for six weeks has been closed, will be reopened in January, New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, (Rev. G. Campbell Morgan), having undertaken the oversight.

The improvement in the health of Rev. W. J. Woods which we were recently able to report has not been maintained. Nevertheless, Mr. Woods is gradually recovering, and there is no cause for grave anxiety.

The first anniversary of the East Side Mission Hall, Whitby, was recently celebrated. The weather was most wintry, but a fair company assembled. Rev. G. S. S. Saunders, the new pastor, presided. From the report presented it appeared that the work is prospering.

As indicating the widespread interest in the Twentieth Century Fund, it is pointed out that the deputations arranged by the central office are not confined to a few well-known names, but that more than forty ministers and laymen have rendered service during the past three months. Special attention is being given to this point for the spring campaign on behalf of the Fund, so that the travelling and speaking shall not become burdensome to the few whose names are well known, but who have heavy responsibilities already resting upon them.

Baptist.

Promises for £600 have already been received for the Twentieth Century Fund in connection with Durham Road Church, Gateshead (Rev. D. P. Packer).

Rev. J. O. Jenkins of Moriah Chapel, Risca, has preached his farewell sermons, having accepted an invitation to Ainon, Tongwynlais. Mr. Jenkins occupied Moriah pulpit for seven years, during which time the new chapel was built and the congregation considerably increased.

At the first anniversary of Rev. A. Tildsley's settlement at Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, Dr. Clifford preached in the afternoon, and in the evening addresses were given by Revs. J. H. Shakespeare and J. P. McKay. The membership has increased, and in addition to paying the usual current expenses, the congregation has raised £300 for new claims.

At King Street Chapel, Oldham, reopening services, after complete renovation of the premises, have been held. On the Wednesday Rev. Charles Williams (of Accrington) preached. Towards the cost of the work nearly £400 has been raised in subscriptions by the King Street people. In addition to this sum, the collections at the reopening services amounted to £70.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan Chapel and Schools, at Romiley, Stockport, have been destroyed by fire, which began with a gas explosion, due to a leak, which had spread to the heating apparatus. The total damage is estimated at £2,500, less than half of which is covered by insurance.

Rev. G. E. Butt, of the Primitive Methodist Mission at Aliwal North, writing on November 17, reports that the Free State Boers have possession of that town, but says that the Commandant has told him that he will not be disturbed in his work, nor will the property of the Mission be touched. Most of the people connected therewith have left the town, and all the schools are closed.

Memorial-stones of a new church have been laid at Sandgate, adjoining the Gough Soldiers' Home. The old chapel, erected eighty years ago, mainly through the labours of Sergeant Gough, father of the orator, J. B. Gough, has seen many glorious times, but became too incommodious for modern requirements. The cost of the new buildings will be £3,657, exclusive of site. General Hallam Parr, commandant of Shorncliffe Camp, laid the first stone.

At Otley Road Wesleyan Chapel, Bradford, a twelve-days' mission has been conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. Backhouse. It was preceded by a week of prayer, and included a special service for young people, one for men, two for women, a short mid-day meeting for eighteen days, and a vigorous mission band every night in the open air. A number of persons have openly declared their conversion. Old members were quickened, and the workers greatly encouraged.

At East Dereham the members of the Wesleyan Quarterly Meeting have felt that insufficient time has been available for discussing work for God from its purely spiritual side. Wednesday, December 6, was set apart for that purpose. The Convention was held at Fakenham. Papers and addresses on Christian life and service were given by members of the meeting. It is hoped that some were led to claim the fulfilment of the "promise of the Father."

The Newcastle Wesleyan Mission has passed another stage of its development. The Blenheim Street Church, with all its agencies, is to be transferred early in the new year to the chapel in Rye Hill, purchased from the Baptists. The edifice is to be supplemented and overhauled. The Committee of the Mission has just accepted tenders for additions and improvements, which will involve an outlay of over £3,000. When completed the premises will be thoroughly equipped for all the various purposes of a vigorous mission.

Presbyterian.

At a recent ministers' meeting at Pittsburg, Rev. Dr. D. R. Breed, Professor in the Western Theological Seminary, read a paper on "The Old Gospel and New Methods are Consistent." He urged that old truths should be presented in attractive style, avoiding stereotyped terms.

The forward movement in New York among the Presbyterian churches is receiving tokens of God's approval. In Dr J. B. Shaw's church fifty persons confessed Christ. At Dr W. Y. Smith's church forty gave themselves to the Lord, and in other churches a deep and lasting work has been done.

Rev. Robert Stewart has conducted a fourteen-days' evangelistic mission in his own church at Benwell, Newcastle-on-Tyne. At every meeting during the mission numbers spontaneously confessed Christ, while others testified to a deepened spiritual life. Conversions did not cease with the mission, but at the close of each Sabbath evening service since several have been led to decision for Christ.

Rev. Dr. Mathews has heard from Natal as to the position of the Presbyterian ministers in South Africa. Rev. J. T. Lloyd, of Johannesburg, is the only one left in the Transvaal. The Presbyteries of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State are, says Mr. Lloyd, broken up and their ministers and congregations are scattered, having become refugees in Natal or Cape Colony. The losses sustained are enormous.

Rev. Dr. C. Moinet, writing to the ministers of the Presbyterian Church of England with respect to the condition of things in South Africa, says: "As Moderator of the Synod, I would suggest that on the first Sunday in the year special acknowledgment be made in all our churches of our manifold national and social sins, and special supplication offered that the spirit of true penitence may be poured out upon all our people, if so be that God may be pleased to withdraw his chastening hand, and to hasten the restoration of peace."

Society of Friends.

While the Sunday schools for children show an increase, there is a decrease in the "adult schools," more especially in the North of England, where the change is thought to be in some measure due to a steady increase in Sunday labour.

At Auckland, N.Z., a meeting for young people has for some time been held on first-day evenings prior to the mission meeting at 7.15. It has been attended by a good number of lads and girls of the "larrikin" class, very difficult to manage. Recently some encouragement has been received in the indications of a change of heart on the part of some.

S. E. Rowntree recently visited Cockermouth, and at a foreign mission meeting held in the evening at the meeting-house, to which the public were specially invited, gave an interesting address, illustrated by diagrams and views of Ceylon, shown by limelight. In the afternoon she attended the working meeting of the Missionary Helpers' Union, and spoke impressively to the members.

At Peckham an evening mission meeting now takes the place of the ordinary Sunday evening meeting for worship. At the first gathering an earnest company of over forty assembled. The presence of the Lord was felt in its quickening and awakening power, confirming the faith of the workers in the belief that God is owning this fresh effort. The presence of Ellwood Brockbank at this and the other meetings of the day was much enjoyed.

A series of Gospel meetings has been held at Hereford, conducted by Arthur Dann, of Brighton, who also gave afternoon Bible-readings for the deepening of spiritual life. The power of the Lord was felt to be present, bringing conviction for sin to some whose voices were heard pleading for forgiveness for past unfaithfulness. On the last evening there was a meeting for testimony, at which nearly all present spoke or prayed, including some young Christians whose voices had never been heard before in public.

Fallen Asleep.

Dr. J. Ewan Brodie, of Glasgow. He was eminent in his professson, and was a prominent member of the Church of Scotland.—Rev. Robert Hamilton, Congregationalist, of Brighton. For many years he was Secretary of the Sussex County Association. He associated himself with many religious activities, and even after his retirement retained a keen interest in affairs.—The death of Mr. John Hutton, of Eccleshill, removes one of the most influential of Yorkshire Congregationalists. Mr. Hutton, who was in his sixty-eighth year, was a munificent benefactor of Congregational organizations.—Mr. W. J. Dawson, a well-known Hull Congregationalist, at the age of sixty-five.—Rev. William Haig, of Norham-on-Tweed, for well-nigh forty-one years minister of the Presbyterian Church.—Mrs. Porter, of Stratton, North Cornwall, has, at the ripe old age of eighty-six, passed "within the veil." She was for about sixty years a consistent member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

Rev. Robert Montgomery, of Dursley, Gloucestershire, who was at one time a colporteur in connection with the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, has been appointed Deputation Secretary for England and Wales on behalf of the Society.

Mission to Public-Houses. — The annual meeting was held last week in the hall at the Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road. Over 100 potmen, with their wives and friends, accepted the invitation of Mr. J. J. Browne, the missionary. After tea a dissolving-view lecture on the Prodigal Son was given by Mr. Charles Fox, one of the district secretaries of the London City Mission. Captain Thorn and Mr. H. Marnham also gave impressive addresses. At the close Mr. Browne was enabled, by the kindness of friends, to give each guest a copy of the Gospels.
